Poetical.

A CONJUGAL DISPUTE.

All at the mid of the night there arose
A quarrel 'twixt husband and wife;
For the young Omer Bey and his spouse,
Falling into discussion and strife,
Wild words to each other they said,
Side by side at the dead
Of the night, on their marriage bed.

Had it been about anything less
The quarrel might have passed by;
But it was not a trifle, you guess,
That set words running so high.
Yet the cause in dispute (to be brief)
Was only a white handkerchief,
Broidered all over with gold,
And scented with rose and with amber
So sweet, the whole house could not hold
That scent from the nuptial chamber.
For (the whole truth herewith to disclose)
This handkerchief broidered with gold,
And scented with amber and rose,
Had been given to the Bey (to enfold
Her letters which lay on his breast)
By the mistress that he loved best.
But his wife had a sensitive nose
For the scent of amber and rose;
And the fiend himself only knows
But, for a lie, ere the close
Of the quarrel there had not been blows.

"You know I've a sister, my treasure,
The wife of our friend, Zekir Bey:
I love her, you know, beyond measure;
And she, dear, on her bridal day,
To me gave this white handkerchief,
Broidered all over with gold,
And scented with amber and rose;
Which precious, for her sake, I hold,
Though the scent of it, much to my grief,
Has troubled our nuptial repose."

Smiling, her husband she heard,
Feeling no faith in his word,
For troubled his face was, she saw.
Up she leapt by the light of the taper,
Barefooted, and seized ink and paper,
And wrote to her sister-in-law;
"Wife of our friend, Zekir Bey,
Long live thy husband, naught ail him,
May'st thou never have cause to bewail him!
Speak truth and fear nothing. But say,
(For truly the truth must be told,)
To thy brother, on thy bridal day,
Didst thou give a white handkerchief brightly
Embroidered all over with gold,
And scented with rose and with amber,
So sweet that the scent of it nightly
May be smelt in the Bey's bridal chamber?"

When this came to the wife of the Bey,
She burst into tears, as she read;
And, "Pity upon me!" she said,
"For I know not, alas! what to say.
If I speak truth, I put strife
'Twixt the brother I love and his wife;
If I speak false, much I dread,
Lest my husband die for it," she said.

Then the letter she laid in her breast;
And she pondered with many a sigh:
"I chose of two evils the least,
If my husband must die, let him die!
Since the choice lies 'twixt one or the other;
Any husband a woman may spare;
But the sister that injures a brother,
Does that which she cannot repair."

Thus shrewdly the matter she saw;
And she wrote to her sister-in-law:
"Wife of my brother, the Bey!
My husband is well. May naught ail him
And I trust I shall never bewail him!
To my brother, on your marriage day
And truly the truth shall be told,
I gave a white handkerchief, brightly
Embroidered all over with gold,
And scented with rose and with amber,
So sweet that the scent (as you say,
And as I cannot doubt of it) nightly
May be smelt in the Bey's bridal chamber."

—[Owen Meredith

TO A BELOVED ONE.

Heaven hath its crown of stars, the Earth
Her glory robe of flowers—
The sea its gems—the grand old woods
Their songs and greeting showers;
The birds have homes, where leaves and blooms
In beauty wreathe above;
High yearning hearts their rainbow-dream,
And we, Sweet! we have love.

We walk not with the jewell'd Great,
Where Love's dear name is sold;
Yet have we wealth we would not give
For all their world of gold!
We revel not in Corn and Wine,
Yet have we from above
Manna divine, and we'll not pine—
Do we not live and love?

There's sorrow for the toiling poor,
On misery's bosom nurst;
Rich robes for raged souls, and Crowns
For branded brows, Cain curst!
But Cherubim, with clasping wings,
Ever about us be,
And, happiest of God's happy things!
There's love for you and me.

Thy lips, that kiss till death, have turned
Life's water into wine:
The sweet life melting thro' thy looks,
Hath made my life divine.
All love's dear promise hath been kept,
Since thou to me wert given;
A ladder for my soul to climb,
And summer up in Heaven.

I know, dear heart, that in our lot
May mingle tears and sorrow;
But Love's rich rainbows built from tears
To-day, with smiles to-morrow.
The sunshine from our sky may die,
The greenness from life's tree,
But over, mid the warring storm,
Thy nest shall shelter'd be.

I see thee! Ararat of my life,
Smiling the waves above!
Thou hail'st me Victor in the strife,
And beacon'st me with love.
The world may never know, dear heart,
What I have found in thee;
But tho' naught to the world, dear heart,
Thou'rt all the world to me.

Last Monday night I saw a ghost,
And fleeing round a corner,
I knocked my head against—no post,
But that of Cousin Horner.
"Now why," said I, (it is his boast He's "quick at riddles, very!")
"Why was this like, before a toast,
A glass of port or sherry?"
Said he, "At the solution I
May call myself a jumper;
For this is my off hand reply—
Because it was a bumper!"

NOTICE.

THE UNDERSIGNED would respectfully inform his friends and the sugar planters generally of the Parishes of Rapides and Avoyelles, that he is now prepared to set or repair kettles and boilers in the most approved style and best workmanlike manner. Having had 25 years experience in this line of business, he feels satisfied that he will render satisfaction, and will guarantee that his work will be better and by his style of setting boilers, economize more fuel than that of any other Mason in either Parish.

Best of references given, if required.

GILES SMITH.
