Says the Philadelphia Record: "The last remnant of the Lancasterian system in teaching in the schools of this city is being removed with the tearing down of the old Research school at Eighth and Filbert streets. It will give place to a modern structure. The Lancasterian system, which was adopted here a few years before its founder, Joseph Lancaster, of London, died in New York in 1838, had its foundation in the principle the monitorial method of teaching the younger pupils by those more advanced, under the supervision of a master. The middle ages had to stand in a circle [illegible] the master or which the monitor stood, gave the directions. Its teacher sometimes the [illegible] platform in the rear. Of course [illegible] a system was popular [illegible] with independent American [illegible], and was soon also [illegible] and other cities. In some of the school buildings where the system was experimented with the iron uprights were removed but of the Research school it has remained as a relic. With the old school bell it will be placed in the convenient room of the new building."

The New York Times of Sunday has the following to say in connection with the approaching International cup race the first of which is to be sailed October 2: "There seems to be general misapprehension regarding the number of races that Columbia must win to retain the cup or Shamrock to capture it. The deed of gift stipulates that the cup shall be awarded to the winner of two out of three races, not three out of five, as is generally thought. It is also thought that the races will follow on successive days. They will be sailed on alternate days and possibly if either contestant requests an extra day, on every third day, while accidents may kind may make a longer interval between them. It is well that people who come to New York with only limited time at their disposal should know this beforehand, so that they can plan accordingly. The sporty public desiring to for accommodations to see the first race and it now looks as if every person in New York at the time who can get a day off will go on the first day, or on some kind of a craft to witness the contest. So the race promises to be a remarkable aquatic spectacle as well as a sporting event. The yacht comprising a day or two ago, are the most popular with the society element, and those who are not invited on the floor of steam yachts which will accompany the racing boats will almost certainly be found on the New York or Atlantic club boats. Few of the larger steam yachts have gone out of commission as usual at this time of year and will all very parties to the race. It is difficult to see where the fleet that will go down the bay later will anchor or can find room even in the Atlantic ocean without crowding the yachts."

"MR. DOOLEY" CREATES A GIRL.

The author of the "Dooley" Mr. Dooley," Finley P. Dunne has joined the literary forces of the Ladies' Home Journal, and will create this fall in that magazine a new character, called "Molly Donahue, who lives across the street from Mr. Dooley." Rev. Sparks says that Molly is a bright young girl of nineteen, who has aspirations for the great world of fashion, clubs, literary societies, golf, clubs, woman's rights organizations, and the "Dooley" literary and social life," and derives on "the other side of Chicago." Her mother remarkably [illegible] her father, who works in the stockyards hard to deal with in the [illegible] insist on affirms at the table in his shirt sleeves and in his stocking feet. "Mr. Dooley" is the family's most intimate friend and is called upon to provide a run across and set matters straight.

Have you ever sat down and counted eight? If not, do it now! [illegible] and realize the importance of 8 [illegible] next?
