THE VOIGT-HAAS ASSIGNMENT.

Justice Bradley Decides to Overrule a Demurrer to Its Validity.

The closing arguments in the case of Henry Ferra vs. Voigt & Haas, to set aside assignment, were heard in the Equity Court to-day before Judge Bradley. Leon Tobriner appeared for the plaintiff and F. T. Browning for the respondents. On January 3 or 5 last, Voigt & Haas made an assignment to O. E. Duffy and there were certain preferences. The respondents claimed that the assignment was made in good faith for the benefit of creditors, and that the preferences were for bona fide debts.

The Court decided to overrule the demurrer of the assignee, Mr. Duffy, and to formulate a decree requiring him to give a bond of $20,000 and to enjoin him from paying out any funds and refer the cause to the auditor to report on the validity of the preferences named in the assignment. Judge Bradley said that a simple contract creditor had the right to institute proceedings. He thought that it was shown that the assignors have a large sum of cash money and it was the duty of the assignee to see that he obtained possession of all the money and property for the purpose of distribution among the creditors. It may be proper for the assignors to be retained in the employ of the assignee, but it was dangerous and might reflect on the honesty of the assignment.

A Great Invention.

Yesterday, by invitation of the American-Energizer Manufacturing Company, a large number of prominent engineers paid a visit to the works at Benning's to witness the improvement made in the working of the momentum engine. It was found that the large 24-foot belts are now on the energizer, and they run to perfection. A test taken gave seventy revolutions per minutes. The visitors were greatly struck with the action of the machinery, and pronounced it to be one of the greatest inventions of the age. The public are invited at any time to visit the works and inspect the working of the engine.

This engine was patented by B. C. Pole, one of the celebrated engineers of this country, and the company is run by some of the most prominent citizens of this District. The company claims that it has been demonstrated to the satisfaction of scientific and practical men that the invention will revolutionize the horse-power of steam engines and prove a bonanza to the enterprising men who had faith in its workings. It means a new era in the development of steam power. The city office is No. 1416 F street.

Droll Illustrations by Thackeray.

From the New York Times.

The February "Harper Monthly" offers fac similies of a series of droll illustrations by Thackeray, which were given many years ago to a Miss George, who was no other than Thackeray's friend Mrs. Robert Bell. The latter bequeathed them to a friend and the friend to Annie Thackeray Ritchie. They represent scenes from the life of Boudin, a sailor bold of Boulogue, who takes a British frigate with three comrades, engages a fleet, is confined in loathsome dungeons at "Portsmoot" and escapes by connivance of the jailer's daughter. The story is fragmentary, and was elaborated from time to time during visits to Miss George. The drawing and action are, if anything, better than in the more careful if not more serious productions of Thackeray's artistic muse. Boudin is not, it must be confessed, like any Frenchman who ever lived. He is the caricature of a London collier, but his appearance in a water-flooded dungeon surrounded by frogs, skulls and hanged men is truly blood-curdling. The effect of Boudin's bounce on Lord Nelson, when brough manacled before that tyrant, is excellently portrayed. Nelson's knees smite together and he instinctively doffs his chapeau before his prisoner.

"The American Disposition."

From the Boston Transcript.

The American disposition is to like anything and everything that is worth liking, without thought of its source, which is but the natural result of our diverse and mixed origins. We can admire "Lohengrin" without detesting "Aida," we can enjoy "The Barber" and have a good time over "Die Meistersinger." There is no good reason why we should not have opportunities for gratifying every worthy taste, and even (faint not, ye overcultured Wagnerites)! to like "Il Trovatore" is not an unworthy taste. Let us have them all, and lots of them, too. "But," some one will say, "to support in one opera-house, through a season, a German, an Italian and perhaps a French company, is impossible." Very true; and those premises being admitted, the reply is: Form a company to sing them all in English. Do you hear, you who pretend that only German is fit for cultured ears? Sing them in English! Do you hear, aspiring sopranos who learn a phonetic Italian to sing without the slightest idea of what it all means? English! English! ENGLISH!

New Hampshire's Danger.

From the Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Senator Blair will go back to New Hampshire on the 4th of March and spend the remainder of his days reciting paragraphs from the "greatest effort of his life" on the Educational bill. If a repetition of the speech has the same effect upon the people of his home town that its original delivery had upon the Senate, Manchester will be depopulated before the year is out.
