Female Beauty.

We find beauty itself a very poor thing unless beautified by sentiment. The reader may take the confession as he pleases, either as an instance of abundance of sentiment on our part, or as an evidence of want of proper ardor and impartiality; but we cannot (and that is the plain truth) think the most beautiful creature beautiful, or be at all affected by her, or long to sit next her, or go to a theatre with her, or listen to a concert with her, or walk in a field or forest with her, or call her by her Christian name, or ask her if she likes poetry, or tie (with any satisfaction) her gown for her, or be asked whether we admire her shoe, or take her arm even into a dining-room, or kiss her at Christmas, or on April-fool day, or on May day, or on any other day, or dream of her, or wake thinking of her, or feel a want in the room when she is gone, or a pleasure the more when she appears—unless she has a heart as well as a face, and is a proper, good tempered, natural, sincere, honest girl, who has a love for other people and other things, apart from self-reference and the wish to be admired. Her face would pall upon us in the course of a week, or even become disagreeable. We should prefer an enamelled tea-cup; for we should expect nothing from it. We remember the impression made on us by a female plaster-cast hand, sold in the shops as a model. It is beautifully turned, though we thought it somewhat too plump and well-fed. The fingers, however, are delicately tapered; the outline flowing and graceful. We fancied it to have belonged to some jovial beauty, a little too fat and festive, but laughing withal and as full of good nature. The possessor told us it was the hand of Madame Brinvilliers, the famous poisoner. The word was no sooner spoken, than we shrank from it as if it had been a toad. It was now literally hideous; the fat seemed sweltering and full of poison. The beauty added to the deformity. You resented the grace: you shrank from the look of smoothness, as from a snake. This woman went to the scaffold with as much indifference as she distributed her poisons. The character of her mind was insensibility. The strongest of excitements was to her what a cup of tea is to other people. And such is the character, more or less, of all mere beauty. Nature, if one may so speak, does not seem to intend it to be beautiful. It looks as if it were created in order to show what a nothing the formal part of beauty is, without the spirit of it. We have been so used to it with reference to considerations of this kind, that we have met with women generally pronounced beautiful, and spoken of with transport, who took a sort of ghastly and witch-like aspect in our eyes, as if they had been things walking the earth without a soul, or with some evil intention. The woman who supped with the Goule in the "Arabian Nights," must have been a beauty of this species.

TIME.—If the word TIME be artificially transposed or metagramized, it will form the following words: METI, EMIT, and ITEM. Now, if the before named words and its anagrams, be placed in the following quadratic position that it will form what many be termed an anagramic palindrome:

T I M E
I T E M
M E T I
E M I T

This word, time, is the only word in the English language which can be thus arranged, and in the different transpositions thereof, are all at the same time, Latin words. These words in English, as well as in Latin may be read either upwards or downwards.

The English words, time, item, meti and emit (to send forth) are mentioned above—and of Latin ones, (1), Time signifies fear thou—(2) Item—likewise—(3), Meti—to be measured, and (4), Emit—he buys.

NEW MODE OF PRESERVING THE DEAD.—Mr. James S. Scotield announces that by a chemical process which he has discovered he is enabled to preserve from decomposition the body after death without subjecting the feelings of surviving friends to the repulsive idea of removing the internal parts, as was the ancient practice. So efficient, he says, is the process, that the ravages of time and decay are completely frustrated—the body remaining in a state of perfect preservation, without change, even in color. By this process also the body may be kept for any length of time, thereby permitting the arrival of distant relatives before consigning it to the tomb. Even after decomposition has commenced, this mode will not only stay its progress, but restore the parts affected to their natural state and appearance, and entirely remove any unpleasant odor arising therefrom.

INDUSTRY.—Man must have an occupation, or be miserable. Toil is the price of sleep and appetite, of health and enjoyment. The very necessity which overcomes our natural sloth, is a blessing. The world does not contain a briar or a thorn that Divine mercy could have spared. We are happier with the sterility which we can overcome by industry, than we could be with the most spontaneous and unbounded profusion. The body and the mind are improved by the toil that fatigues them; that toil is a thousand times rewarded by the pleasure which it bestows. Its enjoyments are peculiar; no wealth can purchase them, no indolence can touch them. They only flow from the exertions which they repay.

GLUTTONY AND MODERATION.—The quantity of food consumed by some insects is truly wonderful. Caterpillars will devour more than twice their own weight in a day. Some larvæ that live on flesh will in the course of a day increase two hundred times in weight. On the other hand, many are extremely abstemious. A mite will live three months, though glued down to a piece of glass. Spiders will live a year without food. Mr. Baker kept a beetle three years in that condition. They eat everything but metals and stones.

AN ARTFUL CREATURE.—She got Mr. Jones by her cunning. He was a timid young man, and very bashful, and did not come up to the scratch, as my brother Jack calls it; so, after two or three letters had been written to him, the artful creature spell'd her Christian name with two r's, so that it read thus: "Marry Ann Smith," and the poor creature took the hint, and did "Marry Ann Smith."—Scientific American.

NO SNOW IN A PORTION OF SIBERIA.—M. Arago states that there is in Siberia an entire district where, during the winter, the sky is constantly clear, and where a single particle of snow never falls.

"You look rather flat," said the tea kettle to the pancake.

"I would take that as an insult," said the pancake, "if you had not been steaming it."

In a very old copy of a work now extant, on necromancy, is the following quaint passage: Question: How to raise a devele? Answer: Catradict your wyfie.

JUDICIOUS ARRANGEMENT.—The rules of the Edenton, North Carolina, Academy require that the boys should wear "jackets of some dark color, and pantaloons."
