HOW ALTOONA CAME INTO EXISTENCE.

When you want to go anywhere in this country you simply get on the Pennsylvania Railroad and go there. There are several other railroads in these parts, but as the "Pennsy" runs to the same place, it amounts to the same thing. One time, the brakeman was telling me, the Pennsylvania Railroad Company wanted a good site for the location of its great shops. It found the place it wanted on the east side of the Alleghany Mountains, on a beautiful plateau. That was just forty years ago. There were not many people living on that plateau in 1840. One daring pioneer and his family were monarchs of the unbroken forest that covered it, and three log huts hidden away in the shadowy recesses of forest were all the indications of civilization to be found there. The railway company sent out an agent to buy the whole plateau, with written instructions to pay $10,000 if necessary. The agent came, he found the pioneer, he put up at his unpretentious log hut, he told him all the new stories from the city, he wrought him into a good humor, and the settler finally made ready to sell at $6,000, considering himself a made man at that. But while he was talking business his good wife was straightening up the stranger's room. She found a package of papers; womanly curiosity prompted her to open the unsealed envelope, she read the agent's instructions. She called her husband into the kitchen in a very few moments, and she did what nine women out of every ten do for their husbands; she made more money for him than he ever dreamed he would be worth; more than he ever could have made if he hadn't had a wife. When the settler returned he told the agent that real estate had picked up a little during the past ten minutes, and he couldn't think of taking less than $10,000 for his claim. There was nothing else to be done; swearing wouldn't help the matter. The $10,000 was paid. Four thousand dollars of it belonged to the woman, but I never heard whether she got it or not. Ten years later the Pennsylvania Railroad began building its shops on the plateau, and now the city of Altoona has upward of 20,000 inhabitants, three or four newspapers, seventeen churches, as many schools, and one convent, the largest railroad shops in America, and the Logan House, a hotel the size of Rhode Island. When I was there I slept in the northeast county of it, too—only eleven miles from the clerk's desk.—[Burdette, in the Hawkeye.

A SOLDIER WHO FOUND $130,000.

Ezelot, the French soldier who found the £26,000 which M. Pages lost in the Northern Railway station in Paris, has communicated to the Courier de l'Aisne the particulars attendant on his good fortune. They are very interesting, and show how some men are born to fortune, some achieve fortune, and some have fortune thrust upon them. Ezelot was walking through the railroad station with two comrades, when they noticed on the floor a packet wrapped in a newspaper. They kicked it along before them for some distance, and when Ezelot was getting into the train, going home on short leave, one of his comrades, picking up the packet, thrust it into the canvas forage-bag slung at his side, Ezelot going on his way without having perceived the little pleasantry. Arrived at Neuilly, where his parents live, his mother, emptying the forage-bag, discovered the bundle and thinking it was a packet of old newspapers, put in on the table in the kitchen. There it remained for four or five days, till a married sister, calling in and seeing the packet, was moved by an unwonted curiosity. Opening it, she discovered documents representing the £26,000, the loss of which M. Pages had advertised throughout Europe. The European papers are not, however, read at Neuilly, where the Courier de l'Aisne doubtless has it all its own way. The soldier and his parents not knowing what else to do, followed the provincial Frenchman's instinct, and had recourse to the Maire. That functionary communicating with Paris, speedily brought down M. Pages, who, gratefully paying the promised reward of £1,000, went off with his oddily recovered treasure. It would be an interesting supplement to the narrative if we could have record of the feelings of the soldier who thrust the packet upon Ezelot, when he heard the sequel to the little joke. WAGNER'S LAST WORK.—Richard Wagner has written a curious treatise, suggested by the experience of the hungry multitude at Bayreuth four years ago. Two out of every three of the pilgrims complained that they could not get enough to eat in the little town, and Wagner, after much pondering over this phenomenon, came to the conclusion that the majority of human beings eat a great deal too much. He announces that his "Parsifal" will be executed at the Bayreuth theater in the summer of 1882, and hopes that the multitudes who flock to it will not sensualize their artistic perceptiveness and receptivity by greedy care about meat and drink. Humanity requires, the poet-musician contends, a grander and simpler food. He appeals to his reverent disciples to renounce the enjoyment of demoralizing flesh-meals, and to strive in future to content themselves with "the higher food," that is, with vegetables only.

The Jesuits having attempted to re-enter Portugal, whence they were expelled in 1759, the Government has instructed the provincial and colonial Governors to watch over the strict enforcement of the decree of 1834, abolishing all religious orders.

At the gambling establishment of Monte Carle the police have strict orders to search the grounds every night for the bodies of suicides, and to remove them as quickly as possible, that visitors may not be shocked by discovering the remains.
