KILLED IN A MINE.—The following is furnished by the Amador Ledger of October 24th:

John Bunney, of Amador City, was killed in the Bunker Hill mine on Wednesday last by one of those unaccountable accidents which at all times imperil the life of the miner. With two or three others, he was engaged in repairing the shaft just below the 300-foot station. Orders had been sent up for some track timbers twelve feet long. A number of these were placed in the skip, and after being tied together the engineer proceeded to lower them to the workers below. In some way not easily explained two of the pieces caught in the shaft, and were drawn out of the skip, and fell down the shaft, passing the skip in their downward flight. One of these struck Bunney on the shoulder and knocked him from the platform. He fell seventy-five feet and was killed instantly, his back being broken. The deceased was buried in Amador City on Thursday. He leaves a wife and one child. Mr. Bunney held a policy of $1,000 in the New England Mutual Life Insurance Company of Boston, taken out about one year ago, which will be promptly paid to his widow.

THE ELEVATOR PROCESS.—The Marysville Appeal of October 25th has the following:

The Feather river opposite the city is beginning to show the effects of the elevator process of hydraulic mining now going on near Oroville. Previous to the commencement of the new subterfuge to circumvent the restrictions on hydraulic mining the Feather was quite clear at this point, but now the element that roils the water and soils the land is again becoming quite prominent, and the waters are losing their wonted clearness. For a distance of ten miles above the bridge the river has but little current, and at the present low stage of water, this section acts as a settler for the debris, so that it takes a great deal to make itself manifest at this point. Above the comparatively dead water the river is quite heavily charged with slickens—the material that settles and does the damage in the lower river beds. This demonstrates that an analysis of the water which runs from the elevator settlers will show that a very large percentage of material is carried in suspension. It is not the heavy material that does the damage to the lower rivers; it is the stuff carried down the steeper grades in suspension.

America Two Hundred Years Ago.

"It is an ill wind that blows nobody good." The ill wind of despotism was nipping many a bud and killing many a fair plant in England and other countries two centuries ago, and sweeping from their dear native lands so many of the best and noblest of their children. But it was doing also a better deed—it was waiting westwards many a cargo of the very people whose past hardships fitted them best for the rough life of a new country, as their grand fidelity to conscience enabled them to lay its foundations firm and deep on the rock, and thereby secure its stability and prosperity for generations to come. It was another "ill wind," nearly a century later, that welded into one the various colonies of the New World, and unfurled the flag of "independence" under which the progress of the United States had become one of the wonders of the world. We can conceive the demon of despotism chuckling with delight as the torch of freedom was extinguished in one fair country of Europe after another, and smiling in derision at the pitiful efforts of the paltry handfuls that had escaped from his grasp to protect themselves on the other side of the sea from the fury of the elements on the one hand, and the tomahawk and the scalping knife of the Red Indian on the other. But under the fostering care of an unseen Hand, the little one became a thousand, and the small one a strong nation, with a rapidity unparalleled in the history of the world; and now the United States, having rid itself of the great blot of domestic slavery, is not only a sure refuge for the oppressed in all parts of the earth, but a glorious witness to the blessedness of freedom, and destined, as we believe, to a leading part in spreading over the world that faith which, by freeing men from tyranny within as well as tyranny without, makes them "free indeed."

The persecutor in England had been at first like the dog in the manger: he would neither let his victims live at home nor try to live abroad. At one time eight emigrant ships lay in the Thames, with their passengers on board, their goods and chattels all disposed of, and their minds buoyant with the thought of the freedom they had never known at home, but were now on the eve of enjoying. But the tyrant would not let them go. Soldiers were sent to clear the ships and drive back the miserable emigrants, poor, helpless and desparing, to endure while life lasted the miserable oppression from which they seemed to have escaped forever. In another case the emigrants were betrayed by the captain, their goods pillaged, and they themselves sentenced to imprisonment. Was it that their persecutors could not give up the pleasure of slitting the noses and cropping the ears of poor wretches who would not obey their behests, or that they imagined that they would more readily crush the spirit of rebellion in others when it was seen that at home nor across the inhospitable ocean could they escape from tyranny so as to obey their consciences in the worship of God?—[Prof. Blaikie in the Quiver for October.

A BADLY MIXED POLITICIAN.—The New York Sun says: "Mr. Schurz is a fine reformer. He believes in the kind of reform that benefits Carl Schurz. Indeed, it is a question whether Schurz's letter is worth noticing. His political opinions have been for sale to the highest bidder these fifteen years past. He was a Republican in 1868 and a Democrat in 1872, a Republican in 1876-1880, and a Democrat in 1884." The Sun is usually very accurate in its statements, but it is a little wide of the mark in the above. Mr. Schurz was a Republican "for revenue only" in 1860. From 1860 to 1864 he was a Republican from principle and for a Major-Generalship. From 1864 to 1868 he was a Republican on speculation. From 1868 to 1872 he was a Republican for a Senatorship. From 1872 until 1876 he was a Democratic Republican. During the winter of 1876-77 he was a Republican Democrat who believed Tilden had been elected. The finding of the Electoral Commission made him a Republican again, and a Cabinet office confirmed him in the faith. In 1884 he was partly a Democrat with Republican principles, and partly a Republican with Democratic principles. It is only just to him to say that while he seems in twenty-five years to have wavered and wobbled as to parties and principles, he always been true to one high ideal, and that while he has forsaken many standards, there is one to which he has always held allegiance—the one which bore the sublime device, "Any man to help Schurz."—[St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

AN INTERESTING DISCOVERY.—The correspondent of the London Times in Rome, writing from that city recently, says: "An interesting discovery illustrating the commerce and luxury of ancient Rome has been made close to Monte Testaccio and the English cemetery. The whole of that district to the west of Aventine, outside the Porta Tregemina, was occupied by granaries and warehouses for the storage of imports of all kinds. Between the northern side of Monte Testaccio and the Tiber there still exists colossal remains of the great emporium built by Marcus Emilius Lepidus and Emilius Paulus, nearly 200 years before the Christian era. In the year 1868 a considerable portion of the quays was discovered, together with some 600 blocks, many of them of large size, of rare, variegated marbles of all kinds, lying just where they were landed from the galleys which had brought them from Numidia, the Grecian Islands and Asia Minor fifteen centuries ago. Now in the course of the building operations in this locality two warehouses have been discovered, one filled with elephants' tusks and the other with lentils. It is curious to find such products stored side by side, but as bags of lentils were sometimes shipped as ballast they may have served that purpose. The discovery would have been a very valuable one if, unfortunately, the ivory had not been much decayed."

ARTESIAN WELL IN MOSCOW.—This well was opened on the 1st of January, 1885. Boring was begun in 1865, but in 1871 the boring-tool broke at the depth of 1,512 feet, and all efforts to extricate it were useless. In 1876 the work was abandoned. In the meantime, however, the water filled the bore to within 40 feet of the surface, and as it was found that this hight remained constant, a new plan was adopted. A gallery was excavated from the bank of the Jaonska river to the well at a level low enough to permit the water to run into a reservoir at the other end. The gallery runs through limestone strata, is 1,400 feet long, and has a fall of 4½ feet. The water is pure (8° R.), and flows abundantly, the daily supply being 770,500 gallons; this is nearly half the whole quantity of water supplied to the city of Moscow. This well ranks among the largest in Europe.—[Wood and Iron.

AFFECTION OF A DOG.—"A touching incident," says a Cambia county paper, "occurred at the funeral of little Nora, daughter of J. C. Stineman, of Gallitzen, Pa., some days ago. The child had a pet dog to which she was very much attached, and when the funeral cortege was awaiting the arrival of the train at South Fork Station, the dog jumped on the coffin and sat there until the casket was placed in the baggage car. He attempted to follow it into the car, and when an effort was made to restrain him, he snapped and snarled viciously, continuing his efforts to get into the car after the train was in motion, and narrowly escaping death under the wheels. He is absolutely inconsolable since her burial."

Call Board sales at the morning session of the San Francisco Produce Exchange were as follows:

Buyer season—100 tons, $1 63; 500, $1 62½.
