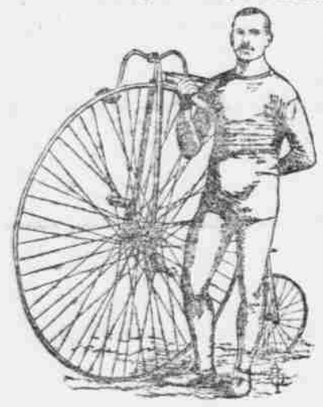
PRINCE, THE BICYCLIST.

The Man Who Bested Reading in the Great Race at Omaha.

JACK PRINCE.

Once more Jack Prince has demonstrated his right to championship wheeling honors. Recently, at Omaha, Neb., he defeated Ned Reading, the phenomenal soldier rider, in a bruising race of six days, riding eight hours a day, for the championship of the world. In defeating Reading he won what was undoubtedly the greatest contest that has ever taken place in the history of cycling. The scene at the finish was a very exciting one, and the enthusiasm of the crowd was at fever heat. Up to the last lap Reading was in the lead, but in the stretch he was unable to stand the pace and Prince crossed the line first, amid the wildest excitement, winner of the world's championship by half a wheel. The total distance covered was 716 miles and 9 laps. Immediately after the race Prince announced his desire to meet any man in the world for a forty-eight hour race at $2,000 a side, the winner to receive all.

John Shillington Prince, the world's champion long distance bicycle racer, was born at Birmingham, England, and is 31 years of age. He commenced riding at 17, and two years later entered the professional races. His greatest achievement prior to coming to America was the defeat of Jack Kean and Fred Cooper, of Sheffield, the champions of England. The race at that time was for one mile, and the best time was 2:52, which at that date was the best record for a mile race. In 1889 he came to America to race against Woodside, the champion of Ireland, and Docivy, the champion of France. He defeated both on all distances from one to twenty miles, and at that time he made the best records to that date. He is the only one who ever defeated Harry Higham, of England, who held the champion seventy-two hour record for seven consecutive years in England. His most notable American race was in 1887, at Minneapolis, Minn., when he ran against Albert Shock. The race was twelve hours a day for six days, and the number of miles covered was 1,043, Prince being out of the saddle but six minutes during the seventy-two hours.



EDWARD READING.

Edward Reading, popularly known as "The Soldier," was born at Mansfield, O., in 1864. He entered the army in 1882 as a musician, and at the present time is the principal musician of the barrack band at Fort Omaha, Neb. He commenced riding under the instruction of John S. Prince. His first race was 100 miles against W. F. Knapp. He covered the distance in five hours and forty-nine minutes and set his own pace. This record is considered first class for a beginner. In 1889, at Chicago, in the great "free for all" race, he defeated such riders as Knapp, Morgan, Prince, Shock, Neilson and others. It was a forty-eight hour race, and he covered 693 miles.

A Man Who Pitches.

Gus Krock is a pitcher of considerable ability. He hails from Milwaukee and did his first professional pitching in 1886 for the Oshkosh club, of the Northwestern league. He did not play in many championship games, but showed up well in the few that he participated in. During the season of 1887 he pitched in forty-three championship games and ranked second in the official list of pitchers of the Northwestern league, with a percentage of .361 hits made off him. Chicago noticed his fine work in the pitcher's box and signed him for the season of 1888. He took part in thirty-nine championship games and led all the Chicago pitchers in the percentage of hits made and ranked eighth of the twenty-six pitchers whose names appeared in the official averages of the National league. During the early part of last season he was unconditionally released by Anson and was immediately signed by Indianapolis, but finished the season with Washington. Krock is a large, broad shouldered man, and has considerable speed, besides having good control of the ball. This season he is playing with the Buffalo team of the Players' league.

The Corsair has been sold by Mr. Brush Commodore Bateman, of the American Yacht club, who will probably go

THE PREHISTORIC RACE.

MOUNDS AND EARTHWORKS IN THE OHIO VALLEY.

Fortified Hills Along the Great Miami. The Valley of the Scioto—Mounds Where Circleville, O., Now Stands—The Ancient Works at Portsmouth, O.

[Special Correspondence.]

CINCINNATI, May 13.—In addition to the ordinary mounds so often described, fortified hills are numerous along the Great Miama river in the vicinity of Hamilton, Dayton and Piqua. Near Hamilton is one of the few ruins in the Ohio valley where are found double walls, that is, two walls of defense, one a few hundred feet beyond the other.

The valley of the Scioto river is perhaps the richest in these wonderful monuments. There are fewer fortified hills, but the inclosures are generally of greater extent, and they are additionally interesting on account of the variety of geometrical figures represented in their plans. One of the most extensive of these is on the north fork of Paint creek, near Chillicothe. It consists of two divisions, the largest containing 111 acres, the smaller 16 acres. The large inclosure is surrounded by a ditch and a wall 12 feet in height. It contains six sepulchral mounds, from which several skeletons have been taken. Another ruin on Paint creek shows that the work originally consisted of two forts, one square, the other circular, each containing about 27 acres. Within the inclosure were several mounds, and four wells, which still retain water, though much filled with stones and debris.

Among the mounds were two elliptical in shape—one 25 feet high, 330 feet long and 170 broad, constructed of stones and earth. Another is 8 feet high and similarly proportioned. Several human skeletons have been taken from these mounds, and also pieces of pottery, crystal trinkets and other articles of use and adornment. To the east of these inclosures is a rocky, precipitous hill, the summit encircled by a wall of undressed stones inclosing 130 acres. Within the inclosure has been found an immense quantity of cinders, as though at one time a furnace had been in operation there.

In the bed of the creek, just below the hill, are four wells, dug through the rock and laid around the top with hewn stone and covered with circular slabs having a small hole through the center. It is thought that the creek has changed its channel since the wells were sunk. They were discovered by a man out rowing, who was attracted by the millstone like coverings at the bottom of the stream. Similar works to those of Paint creek have been found all along the Scioto to its junction with the Ohio at Portsmouth, opposite which on the Kentucky side are extensive ruins, the first explorers of which report evidences of the remains of chimneys.

The present city of Circleville occupies the site of one of these old works, now entirely leveled. It consisted of two inclosures, one a circle, the other a square, with its sides facing the points of the compass. The square inclosure had eight entrances, each defended by a mound. Each side of the square was fifty-nine rods long and the wall ten feet high. The circle was sixty-nine rods in diameter, with double walls twenty feet high and a ditch between. There were a number of mounds within and without the inclosures, one in the center of the circular fort with a semicircular pavement on the eastern side and ascended by a graded way. The town takes its name from the circular fortification.

The ancient works at Portsmouth, now partially leveled, were intricate in character. They consisted chiefly of parallel walls several feet in height, running from the water's edge a distance of four miles across the low lands to the summit of a large hill, where after a detour they terminated near several large sepulchral mounds. Three of these were six feet in height and covered each nearly an acre. Another was quite twenty feet in height. In the vicinity are unfinished mounds, one of them twenty-five feet high, and already containing the remains of many dead. There are the remains of several wells, now partially filled with stones and debris. From these mounds parallel walls extend eastwardly over two miles to the river. The total length of embankment, with all detours, is given at twenty miles, and in many places the ruins are several feet high.

The ruins in the Muskingum valley are no less interesting than those already described. At the confluence of the river with the Ohio there were extensive works before encroached upon by the rapidly growing city. In the early history of the city there were two large inclosures and a large conical mound. The largest inclosure contained forty acres and the smaller twenty. The embankments were from six to ten feet high and thirty feet broad at the base. There were three gateways on each side of the large inclosure. A sort of covert way extended between parallel walls of earth 231 feet apart from the large inclosure to the river, and the way was so graded that these walls were twenty-one feet high on the inside and but five on the outside, which made the cut of the grade about sixteen feet.

Within this inclosure was a mound, whose summit was reached by a graded ascent. The other inclosure had a gateway in the middle of each side and at the corners, each defended by a mound. There was within a conical mound, 115 feet in diameter, 30 feet high, and surrounded by a ditch and embankment. There were also excavations that could have served no other purpose so well as for reservoirs for the storage of water.

Near Newark, in Licking county, an extensive succession of fortifications existed. Commencing on the westerly side of the works there was first a circular fort containing twenty acres, on one side of which stood an elevated observatory constructed of earth and stones, beneath which there appears to have been a subterranean passage. This circular fort is connected by parallel walls with an octagonal fort containing forty acres. The walls of this fort are ten feet high and contain eight gateways, each defended by a mound on the inside extending across the opening. Thence extended two parallel walls protecting a graded descent to the waters of Raccoon creek, a tributary of the Muskingum, and then in a nearly opposite direction into the country back of the works for several miles, toward the Hocking river.

Two parallel walls also connect the octagonal fort with a square fort of twenty acres which, in turn, is connected by similar walls with a circular fort of twenty-six acres, surrounded with an embankment twenty-five feet high. From the square fort a protected way leads to the water which formerly flowed much closer to the works, and the banks were protected by a high embankment. To the east, on an elevated plateau, stood several sepulchral mounds, making a cemetery where many skeletons have been found. On the whole these works are the most expensive and complicated in the valley.

GEORGE S. MCDOWELL.

Count Punch-Your-Nose.

Charles V was a great hunter. One day, while partridge shooting, he was accompanied by a gamekeeper, who joined in the sport. The servants of his majesty were loaded with game, when a partridge rose under the feet of the two sportsmen. Two shots went off simultaneously. The partridge dropped.

"Who killed that bird?" said the king to the gamekeeper.

"I did," was the reply.

"You lie, you scoundrel," said the king, in a rage.

Thereupon the guard unceremoniously slogged his majesty. The first movement of Charles was to try to kill him, but fortunately his gun was unloaded. Then his second and more successful effort was to save the man from the fury of his attendants and to send him off to prison, with the recommendation to prepare for death, remarking also that his offense was all the more atrocious because he could not say that he really did not lie, inasmuch as it was doubtful who shot the bird.

"I have no doubt about it, sire," replied the prisoner. "Permit me to examine the bird."

The king ordered the partridge to be brought to him, and after having examined it the guard affirmed that it was he who shot it, because it was hit by a bullet, and he had used bullets all day long, while the king used shot. A further examination of the dead partridge by the king and his attendants proved that the gamekeeper was correct.

The king was sorry, but he nevertheless sent the prisoner to Madrid, where he was placed in the cell of offenders condemned to death. At the last moment the king promised him pardon if he would repent, but the guard refused. Charles ordered the gatekeeper to be brought into his presence and again asked him if he repented.

"Sire," replied the guard, "if I had a thousand lives, and your majesty should tell me a thousand times, without reason, that I lied, a thousand times I would punch your majesty in the nose, and a thousand times I would go quietly to execution!"

"And you would thus be a loss to my reign!" exclaimed the king. Would that I were surrounded by men like you! I not only pardon you, but I attach you to my person, and make you Count of Punonrostro (Fist-in-the-Face)."

In 1523 the title was formally bestowed upon the new count, and until his death he was one of the most faithful vassals of Charles V.—Nouvelle Revue Internationale.

The Last Word.

It was in a sleeping car, and they thought that every one else was asleep. Probably every one had been, but they woke me.

When I was enough awake to notice what was going on, I heard her:

"Well, I don't care. I think you're real mean. All I want"——

"Yes," broke in he, "all you want now is the last word, same as you always have, ain't it?"

"Yes; and I'll have it, too!" spitefully.

"You won't!"

"See if I don't."

"All right."

"All right it is."

"Have to mock every word I say, don't you?"

"Heavens, no! You never say anything worth repeating."

"Why do you echo me, then?"

"I don't!"

"You do!"

"I don't!"

"Shut up!"

"I won't!"

"Ugh!" And there was a noise like a man tumbling into his berth.

Then we heard, rather softly, as if talking to herself: "I said I'd have the last word, and I did. 'Ugh' don't count, 'cause I don't believe it is a word."—Harper's Bazar.

For Bright People.

A correspondent calls our attention to the following item which appeared in the papers in 1868, and which we reproduce as originally given.

A DIFFICULT RIDDLE.

This enigma has been frequently published but never solved:

I sit stern on the rock while I'm raising the wind,
But the storm once abated I'm gentle and kind.
Kings sit at my feet who wait at my nod
To kneel in the dust on the ground I have trod.
I'm seen by the world and known but by few,
The Gentile detests me—I'm pork to the Jew.
My weight is three pounds, my length is a mile,
And when once discovered you'll say with a smile
That the first and the last are the pride of our isle.

The answer is a word of one syllable.

No answer, so far as we know, has ever been returned to this riddle. It is probably an English puzzle, and it may be local or it may be a hoax. Can any one furnish a solution? We do not know who wrote it, nor where it first appeared, but it was frequently published about a quarter of a century ago.—Youth's Companion.

Not So Big as He Thought.

It is veraciously chronicled that once upon a time, while traveling west of Omaha, Mr. Charles Francis Adams was visited in his private car by a typical cowboy, dressed in regulation costume. He was as much above the average height as Mr. Adams was below it. Turning to the railway president, he inquired:

"Be you Charles Francis Adams?"

"Yes," was the reply.

"Charles Francis Adams, president of the Pacific road?"

"Yes."

"Then you are the man who writes those heavy railroad articles for the papers?"

"Yes."

"Gracious, but I expected to see somebody seven feet high! You ain't as big a man as I thought you was, anyhow!"—New York Tribune.

Great Britain Enlarging.

The superficial area of the British empire is slowly but appreciably extending on a section of the coast of the English channel. In one of the rooms of the Dungeness lighthouse there is an inscription setting forth that it was erected in the year 1792, on a spot distant from the sea by 100 yards, in substitution for an older lighthouse that at this date stood 540 yards further inland. When this older lighthouse was built it was on the marge of the sea. The existing structure, whose centenary will be celebrated in 1892, was, as the inscription sets forth, built 100 yards from the water's edge. It is now fully 500 yards distant, and the sea is ever receding.—Exchange.

Why Some Men Fail.

Some men fail because they overrate their own ability and underestimate that of their competitors. Such a mistake should be carefully avoided. Let a man with ever so great natural ability, but lacking a capacity for hard work, compete with a duller man, but one who toils early and late, and the latter will out run him on the road to success every time. Wed natural ability to hard work and you have a combination nothing can defeat.—Interview in Philadelphia Times.

ALL AROUND THE HOUSE.

Novalties in Fine and Delicate Napery. Drawn and Darned Work.

Among the handsomest of decorated napery sets are those in blocks or checks of drawn and darned work. The blocks are filled in with a blossom of magnified size of Kensington satin stitch embroidery, done with silk or linen floss. Decorator and Furnisher describes a set in illustration for a tea table, which has the drawn and darned work done in gold colored silk, with the blocks or squares relieved with great cactus blossom done in white silk. The set consists of the table cloth, one dozen napkins and one dozen doylies. The finish is a hem with bordering of Irish crochet lace of very delicate design, the lace on the table cloth being about six inches wide; that on the napkins four inches wide, and that on the doylies two inches in width.

The plain satteen table, with side ribbon borders, which now comes in complete sets, is admirable for decorating, and is extremely handsome. In the fancy of the moment for white on white in table linen embroidery delightful effects can be secured by powdering the center with blossoms or floral sprays, or with fruits, and between the bands of the bordering may be a floral garland or a fruit design; or, with the surrounding garland, a mat of flowers may be massed in three of the corners, with the owner's monogram in the fourth corner. Nor need the embroidery be confined to white unless absence of color be practically considered in the use of several different sets of china—gold color, red and blue on white linen are very charming in embroidery, or the coloring may be after nature.

A Pretty Fancy.

It is a favorite fancy at present to have everything to match on a writing table, such as the various sized photo frames, blotting book, case for loose notes or photos, envelope case, and box (without lid) for throwing in unanswered notes, etc. A delicate shade of pistache green brocatelle is popular. All sorts of cardboard, or even wooden and cigar boxes can be covered with plush or brocade by skillful fingers. The top is usually raised by a little judicious padding, then covered with the brocade or plush, and edged all round with an old looking gold fancy braid. The lining is of watered silk or Surah, and this has to be done in separate pieces (i e., top, bottom and the four sides), neatly stretched and glued over thin cardboard, and then carefully glued to the box. In some of the effective brocades now being sold, in white or pale colors, the effect is beautiful.

A Cozy Chair.

Some of the most convenient as well as comfortable easy chairs made are those of wicker or basket work. They are convenient because of their comparative lightness and the consequent ease with which they can be moved about; and comfortable because of their pliability and cushion lined seats and backs. Although wicker chairs are especially desirable for summer use, they are at the same time good all seasons' affairs when properly upholstered.

THE STUDENT'S CHAIR.

In the cut is illustrated an English novelty in basket work, introduced under the name of student's chair. This, as will be observed on referring to the cut, is provided with a deep pocket, wherein one may deposit journals, books and the like. Wide awake readers of this column who are already possessed of ordinary forms of wicker chair may readily add a pocket or basket of cretonne or other material matching the cushions.

French Breakfast Rolls.

Make one and a half pints of milk quite warm, add it to half a pint of brewers' yeast, and then add sufficient flour to make it as thick as batter. Put it into a basin, cover it over, and keep in a warm place. When it has risen as high as it can, add a quarter of a pint of warm water and half an ounce of salt. Mix them well together, and rub into it a little flour and two ounces of butter. Make the dough not quite so stiff as for bread; let it stand for three-quarters of an hour, and then it will be ready to be made into rolls. Let them stand till they have risen, and bake in a quick oven.

Orange Float.

Six sliced oranges, one pint of boiling water, one lemon, juice and grated rind, one small cupful of sugar, two heaping tablespoonfuls of cornstarch and whites of two eggs. Arrange the sliced oranges in the bottom of a dish and pour over them a light custard made by stirring the lemon, sugar and cornstarch into the boiling water until it thickens; spread the whole with the whites of the eggs beaten stiff with a little powdered sugar. Serve with milk or cream. Time, twelve minutes.

Almond Pudding.

Blanch four ounces of sweet almonds and one ounce of bitter almonds and pound them in a mortar; add a few drops of rose water while pounding. Stir one-quarter pound of butter and one-quarter pound of sugar to a cream. Beat well the whites of six eggs; stir the almonds and beaten eggs alternately into the butter and sugar. Line a pie dish with puff paste, pour in the mixture, and bake in a moderate oven half an hour. Sprinkle with sugar and serve.

Princess Pauline Metternich is a clever amateur actress. At a performance in Vienna she walked about among the audience in the costume of a washerwoman, "receiving compliments and asking advice."

The queen of Roumania says: "I shall always maintain that the active life of woman ought not to go beyond the sacred interior of her home, and that the voice of woman sounds nowhere so sweetly musical as on her own hearthstone in the midst of her children."

The visit of the shah's first favorite wife to Europe will cost at least £20,000. Her journey from Teheran to Vienna occupied four weeks, and expenses were £6,800. The fees of the two surgeons who attended her in Vienna and operated on her left eye amounted to £1,600.

The emperor of Germany has his cards like other mortals. They are very simple, although those of the German nobility are generally very highly decorated with crests and crowns. The royal cards have absolutely no ornamentation. In plain gold letters they read: "Wilhelm, German Emperor and King of Prussia."

NOTES ON THE NUMBER SEVEN.

The ancient Peruvians had a tradition of the deluge from which seven persons saved themselves in a cave and repeopled the earth.

There were seven planets in the Egyptian astronomy, and hence the seven days of the week, each ruled by and named after its proper constellation.

The oldest inhabitants of Mexico traced their descent from seven persons, each of whom was hidden in a separate cave during the inundation of water.

It is noticeable, and certainly singular, that the ancient people of Peru were found to be employing a seven day week without planetary names for these divisions of time.

In Scotland, according to a legend, Thomas of Erildoune meets a beautiful lady of the elfin race, who leads him underground, where he remains with her for seven years.

Tannhauser, while riding on his way to the Wartburg, sees Venus before him in all her loveliness, and, getting off his horse, follows her to a cave in the mountains, where he spends seven years in enthrallment.

The ancient Jews considered this number the embodiment of perfection and unity; thus, they say the Hebrew letters composing Samuel have the value of seven, this name having been given to him because of the greatness and perfection of his character.—The London Daily Globe.

The Prince of Wales ages fast and motion is too clearly no longer a pleasure to him. His figure is growing much like the queen's. But he keeps his good humor, at least when he is in company, and takes as much pleasure as ever in the theatre, particularly when the piece is funny.

How tolerant of all sects and opinions was the late Empress Augusta is again brought to notice by the gifts, just paid over in accordance with her will, of 5,000 marks to the St. Hedwig's hospital in Berlin, a Roman Catholic institution, and of a similar sum to the Jewish almshouses.

Ex-Queen Isabella, of Spain, was found easily accessible to an interviewer, who shrewdly broached the subject of the little Spanish Benny. She said: "Of course, I know that all grandmothers think that their grandchildren are the finest infants in the world, but I think I am right in believing the little king, my grandson, to be an exceptionally bright and intelligent little boy."

Prince Bismarck has never been called "the Iron Chancellor" by the Germans. The title is one of French or British invention. Bismarck was called "Der Eisens Graf" after the battle of Sadowa, and for years he was known only as "The Iron Count." But this title is said to have been given him in admiration for his nerve in himself arresting Blind, who tried to assassinate him in the open street.

ERRORS OF YOUTH.
SUFFERERS FROM Nervous Debility, Youthful Indiscretions, Lost Manhood.
HOPE
Be Your Own Physician!
Many men, from the effects of youthful imprudence, have brought about a state of weakness that has reduced the general system so much as to induce almost every other disease, and the real cause of the trouble scarcely ever being suspected, they are doctored for everything but the right one. Notwithstanding the many valuable remedies that medical science has produced for the relief of this class of patients, none of the ordinary modes of treatment effect a cure. During our extensive drug and hospital practice we have experimented with and discovered new and concentrated remedies. The accompanying prescription is offered as a certain and speedy cure, as hundreds of cases in our practice have been restored to perfect health by its use after all other remedies failed. Perfectly pure ingredients must be used in the preparation of this prescription.
℞—Erythroxylon coca, 16 drachm,
Jaborandi, 16 drachm,
Helonias dioica, 16 drachm,
Gelsemin, 8 grains,
Ext. ignatiæ amaræ (alcoholic), 8 grains,
Ext. nux vomica, 8 grains,
Glycerine, q. s. Mix.
Make 60 pills. Take 1 pill at 8 p. m., and another on going to bed. In some cases it will be necessary for the patient to take two pills at bedtime, making the number three a day. This remedy is adapted to every condition of nervous debility and weakness in either sex, and especially in those cases resulting from imprudence. The recuperative powers of this restorative are truly astonishing, and its use continued for a short time changes the haggard, debilitated, nervous condition to one of renewed life and vigor.
As we are constantly in receipt of letters of inquiry relative to this remedy, we would say to those who would prefer to obtain it of us, by remitting $1 as security we will send a package containing 60 pills, carefully compounded, will be sent by return mail from our private laboratory, or we will furnish 4 packages, which will cure most cases, for $3.

One of the best evidences of the superiority of Imperial and Tally-ho flour is that inferior brands are represented "just as good." They are not. Don't be deceived. 139 tf

DOCTOR PURDY,
Surgeon, Oculist and Aurist
154 N MAIN ST., WICHITA, KAN.
The doctor gives special attention to the treatment of all diseases of the EYE, including the scientific adjustment of glasses to correct imperfect vision.
CATARACT removed and sight restored to many who have been totally blind.
CROSS EYES straightened in one minute.
SORE EYES cured without the use of caustics or other harmful agents.
ARTIFICIAL EYES carefully selected and applied.
DEAFNESS—All curable cases of deafness promptly cured.
GLASSES—Only those who have had a thorough training should attempt to fit glasses, lest they do the patient more harm than good. Many cases of nervousness, irritability, insomnia, headache, vertigo and seeming stupidity in children are due to defective vision and are removed at once by the application of proper glasses.
Doctor Purdy has achieved a success little less than phenominal as a general surgeon, treating with great success deformities, club foot, curvature of the spine, hip joint disease, white swelling, diseases of the bone, cancer, ulcers, tumors, old sores, hair lip, facial blemishes, skin and blood diseases, etc. Syphilis absolutely cured. Doctor Purdy was late professor of surgery in the Wichita Medical College and Surgeon to St. Francis Hospital, having relinquished the above positions in order to devote his entire time to his specialties.
N. B. Superfluous hair, facial blemishes, moles, etc., removed by electricity. Correspondence solicited. Consultations free.
R. P. PURDY, M. D.
