Wheat Bread.

Our whole process of converting wheat into bread has, at almost every step, violated the laws of nature and disregarded her suggestions, and the reform must be a fundamental one. Wheat is, beyond all dispute, the most perfect article of human food, it being the only vegetable production yet discovered that contains all the elements necessary for the nourishment of the muscle, bones, fatty tissue and brains, in just the right proportion. Beans, peas, Indian corn, and the other grains afford perfect nourishment for all the organs but the brain, by which term is included the spinal marrow and the nerves, which branch from the brain, and are identical in composition with it, the whole forming one system or set of organs. Now the pabulum of the brain is phosphorus, whose life-giving fire thrills along the nerves, and whose light illumes the chambers of the mind—for could we rightly understand the correspondences between the material and the spiritual, we might see that light in the intellectual sense was something more than a mere figure of speech. This wear of the brain by study or any mental effort throws off the phosphorus, which is found with other waste matter in the secretions. To keep the brain healthy and in working order, the waste must be restored by the use of food containing phosphorus, and that food is wheat.

It would seem as if wheat was made for brain food, and man, the only animal that works with his brain, is the only consumer of it. But by a strange caprice, the promptings of his intuitions are overruled by his tastes, and in this particular instance, to his great detriment, nearly every particle of this brain-nourishing phosphorus is found in the hull or bran of the wheat, which, when separated from the flour, for the sake of merely gratifying the eye with the sight of white bread, carries with it all the superiority which wheat possesses over a dozen other kinds of cheaper vegetables. In addition to this, the mechanical action of the bran on the internal organs keeps them in a healthy state, and supersedes the necessity of pills and other cathartics which many people are obliged to use habitually. This matter of making flour of the whole wheat, is well understood and approved by every school of physicians, and through their recommendation to their patients, and the teachings of health journals, its use is becoming somewhat common, and wheat flour, as it is called, is a staple article in the markets.

Strong as the prejudice may be at first against the brown, plebeian-looking loaf, it will vanish in most cases at the first taste, if the bread is well made from well-ground wheat of a good quality, the sweet, fragrant, putty flavor commending it to every taste not thoroughly vitiated. With wheat flour, the complaints of heavy, sour, and insipid bread would vanish forever, as it is so light, owing to the feathery particles of the hull which pervade it, but it is, when mixed with pure cold water alone, absolutely self-rising to a greater extent than fine flour can be rendered by yeast.

Again, no less than thirteen per cent. of the flour is saved by dispensing with yeast, as the fermentation in its growth converts that proportion of the starch and sugar into alcohol. This is saved, of course, by the use of an alkali and acid to generate carbonic acid, but a deleterious neutral salt is, in every case, left in the bread—tartrate of soda, if cream of tartar is used; lactate of soda, if sour milk, and molasses, if molasses. The best and most entirely innoxious mode of raising fine flour for those who will use it, is to use muriate acid, which forms with soda common salt, which is needed in the bread, and is a constituent of the human body.

How John Bull Shaves.

The genuine pleasure of a shave, as it is found in the United States, is here unknown. The quiet lay back in a luxurious arm chair, with your feet up, a clean towel about your neck, then a creamy lather of perfumed soap, and a razor with so keen an edge that you do not feel it. "Does this razor hurt you, sah?" and then the delicate touch of the barber as he passes over your face, leaving the skin as soft and fragrant as satin. This, with the rubbing and dressing of your hair, is a happiness which the Englishman, in the utmost flight of his imagination, has never yet been able to conceive. John Bull generally shaves himself, and likewise carries his tin bath tub with him when he travels. Bath rooms, as they are found in our hotels, are, in his opinion, not at all the thing. In other words, "it is not English."

There are a number of establishments throughout London, however, for brushing the hair by machinery. This is an invention far superior to anything of the kind in vogue in America. Enter one of these rooms, and you will notice a revolving shaft extending along the ceiling, with pulleys upon it at regular intervals. Beneath each pulley is a barber's chair, with a flexible band of India rubber extending down from above. You are placed in the chair, sitting upright, and the operator takes his position behind you with his brush, which is of a cylindrical shape, about six inches in diameter, the bristles extending from axis outward. A spindle goes through it, with a handle at each end. This spindle, which is held by the barber with both hands, is stationary, while the brush revolves about it with lightning velocity, when the hand which hangs down from the shaft above it is placed around a pulley on the brush. The elasticity of the India rubber band is such that the operator can hold the brush, turning all the time, a foot above your head; two feet behind you just touch your hair or sweep through it with the velocity of a hundred revolutions a minute, while a cloud of dust and dandruff falls down in front of you, leaving your head perfectly free from all impurities, more so than any shampooing process could accomplish. The whole thing is done in an instant almost. They have hard brushes and soft brushes, and the sensation as they whirl around your head and through your hair is electrical. A morning headache disappears almost immediately; and any one who has ever experienced the luxury of having his hair brushed by machinery, finds it a pleasure, which, in the future he will not willingly forego. There are hundreds of these establishments in England, and their number is constantly increasing.

The only wonder is that they have not been introduced into the United States long ago. I believe one such establishment has recently been opened in New York, in the Everett House, and has been extensively patronised. A general adoption of the system in every city would be recognised as a public benefit.

[London Cor. Cincinnati Commercial.

THE STAFF OF LIFE.—Dr. Henry S. Chase, in the Medical Investigator, estimates that a mother and child under eighteen months, together require for the nutrition of the dental and osseous systems, 55 grains per day of phosphate of lime for the former, and 27 grains for the latter. These 82 grains, he says, are contained in 10 ounces of cheese, in 31 ounces of peas, in 35 ounces of fresh mutton, beef, or unbolted wheat flour, or in one hundred and seventy-five ounces of fine flour, such as we commonly use—enough to make a dozen loaves of baker's bread of the largest size. Think of a woman eating a dozen of those loaves daily to sustain the osseous system! It is consoling that bread is a minor item in the diet of most persons. Want of backbone, or any bone at all, would result from a diet of fine wheaten bread, if these calculations are not at fault somewhere. Living on "bread and butter" of this sort is too common, however, among the women and children of America. There is a "fatal facility" about it. We must have a new "staff of life," with more bone in it, and equally handy.

TAX THE BONDS OR REPUDIATE THE DEBT.—This begins to be the cry of large masses of the Northern people. Read the short article on this subject, which we republish from the Oregon National Guard. All other newspapers and private letters from the North convey the same sentiment. The poor people and those of moderate means think it hard that they should be taxed so heavily while the bond-holders are exempt and living in luxury. We have not a word to say on this point, pro or con. We give it as political information, showing from what point the wind is coming. It is certain that this question is attracting the attention of the laboring classes at the North. Its discussion cannot be averted. The contest there between capital and labor is coming on. They "who sow the wind must reap the whirlwind."

[Northern paper.

The Barton county (Texas) Index says that a gentleman passed through Lamar the other day, leading a pony which had been captured wild on the plains, and which, though over four years old, only measured three feet two inches high. The Index adds:

We also have a bovine curiosity in town, in the shape of a buffalo calf, whose mother is an American cow. Dr. Pyle purchased the cow of an emigrant from the Indian territory last fall, and one day last week she brought him as fine a buffalo calf as can be found anywhere. The little curly-headed fellow seems to recognise its maternal source, while the cow is as proud of the young hybrid as though she had no other ambition in the world than to see it grow and do well.

MAXIMILIAN'S AVENGERS.—I understand that an army of volunteers to avenge the murder of Maximilian is being formed in many of the leading cities of Europe.

The enthusiasm of the higher classes of young men to join in this modern crusade is irrepressible.

The "Head Center" of the movement will probably be in London. It is also stated that at least five hundred thousand volunteers have enlisted, and there is no doubt but what a severe retribution will be dealt upon Mexico. It will be hardly fair to visit upon a nation a retribution which should fall upon one man.

DOLBEAR
COMMERCIAL COLLEGE,
Corner Camp and Common Streets,
NEW ORLEANS.
FOUNDED IN 1832.

THIS INSTITUTION, chartered by the State, and situated in the spacious and elegant "Story" iron building, is constantly in session, under an able corps of professors. Its former students may be found as principals or book-keepers in a large number of the old business houses of New Orleans and the Southern States. Ladies as well as gentlemen can attend the Commercial Course, or Book-keeping, Penmanship, Mathematics, English, French, or Spanish, separately. A business education, that enables the student to earn $1000, $2000 or $3000 annually, is the best fortune parents can give their sons. A diploma from this College is a passport to all commercial communities. Ladies and gentlemen are invited to call. We have ample accommodations for 1000 students during the current year. Catalogues sent to those desiring to see them. [mh6 1y] RUFUS DOLBEAR.
