Hawaiian Sugar Company Draws A One Dollar Fine

In the case of Ishii Tsuru against the Hawaiian Sugar Co., which was completed in the Fifth Circuit court last Wednesday, the plaintiff was awarded one dollar damages. The case was of more than the usual interest because it had been tried twice before. In the first trial the jury decided in favor of the defendants. The Supreme court reversed the ruling and sent the case back to Lihue for a new trial.

Ishii Tsuru, the plaintiff, became involved in some financial difficulties, due to her misappropriation of some tanimoshi funds entrusted to her and shipped out for Honolulu in August 1919. She left secretly and the impression was gained in Makaweli that she was not coming back.

Soon after she left, inhabitants of the camp, where she had lived began pillaging her house, the plantation moved her goods to the warehouse for protection.

Soon after the goods were put in the warehouse a number of Japanese went to Mr. Hayashi, manager of the Japanese department of the store, and told him that the woman had left for good and that they would like to buy her goods. Mr. Hayashi referred the matter to Mr. Bayer, who consented to the arrangement.

About a week after the goods were sold the owner suddenly reappeared in Makaweli. The plantation hearing that, ordered her goods recovered. The money was refunded to the purchasers.

The woman brought suit against the sugar company for $5000 damages. A. Kaulukoa represented her. When the case was first brought up Judge Lyle Dickey presided in the Circuit court. He was disqualified because he was a stockholder in the company. Judge Cornell Franklin was sent from Honolulu to preside.

In the re-trial, Judge Wm. C. Achi Jr., presided. The defendants were represented by Louis A. Warren of Honolulu.
