Hawaiian Electric Company.

The cleanest, brightest safest and really, in the long run, the cheapest and best light for use in the family residence, is the incandescent electric light. Safe; nothing could be safer. A few days ago a prominent gentleman of Honolulu came rushing down to the office of the Electric Company and said: "Give me figures for wiring my house, and I want it done at once; no more lamps for me. Last night a lamp tipped over and it came so near setting fire to the house and burning my children and I take no more risks."

This is the sentiment of quite a number in the past few weeks, who have ordered their houses fitted with the perfect light.

Just think it over and make up your mind that you want the best and safest light; send for the Hawaiian Electric Company and tell them what you want.

We have a complete stock of everything in this line and have just received a lot of the very latest designs in chandeliers.

LIVES WITHOUT A STOMACH

WOMAN SURVIVES A WONDERFUL OPERATION.

Apparently Enjoys the Best of Health and Makes No Complaint—Dr Wendt Draws Some Conclusions.

The opinions of physiologists regarding the functions of the stomach have been somewhat altered by the success of a recent rather sensational surgical operation in which the entire stomach of the patient was removed. The subject, a Swiss woman, is still alive and well, and naturally her condition has excited interest.

Dr. C. E. Wendt, of New York, says of the case, which he terms "remarkable and unique:"

"At the date of the present writing, December 9, 1897, over three months since the operation of total ablation of the stomach, the woman is still under observation at the county hospital; but she is to all intents and purposes a well woman, and does her full share of the daily work of the ward. On the date of my first visit I found her in a very cheerful frame of mind, and quite loquacious.

"On my several examinations of the patient I was particularly struck by her ruddy complexion, fair general appearance, clean, moist tongue, moderately full and vigorous pulse, and general alacrity. She informed me that her appetite was good, but that she was never allowed to feel really hungry. She relished her meals and her taste was unimpaired. The bowels acted naturally once in twenty-four hours. Her sleep was normal. She complained of no pain.

"In a word, save for some degree of emaciation, a noticeably dry skin and her abdominal cicatrix, the woman at present offers no apparent departure from average health. How long she can survive the non-existence of gastric digestion is the question. Who can tell? Clinical observation sometimes rudely disturbs our most cherished school taught physiological dogmas."

Dr. Wendt says that although several surgeons have recently reported cases of total removal of the stomach, these operators have always allowed some small part to remain, so that this is the first real case of the kind on record. Animals have survived complete destruction of the stomach, however, so that there was reason to suppose that it might not be fatal to a human being.

The patient, Anna Landis, was a sufferer from a tumor that involved almost the whole stomach. After the removal of the organ, the oesophagus was joined directly to the intestine, so that food would pass into it as before. Nine days after the operation the patient was eating milk, eggs, gruel, meat, tea and wine, and she steadily improved. An interesting feature was the occurrence of vomiting, which most physiologists have regarded as proceeding from action of the stomach.

Dr. Wendt draws the following conclusions from the results of Dr. Schlatter's operation:

1. The human stomach is not a vital organ.
2. The digestive capacity of the human stomach has been considerably overrated.
3. The fluids and solids constituting an ordinary mixed diet are capable of being digested without the aid of the human stomach.
4. A gain in the weight of the body may take place in spite of the total absence of gastric activity.
5. Typical vomiting may occur without a stomach.
6. The general health of a person need not immediately deteiorate on account of the removal of the stomach.
6. The most important office of the human stomach is to act as a reservoir for the reception, preliminary preparation and propulsion of food and liquids. It also fulfils a useful purpose in regulating the temperature of the swallowed solids and liquids.
8. The chemical functions of the human stomach may be completely and satisfactorily performed by the other divisions of the alimentary canal.
