BILLY WILLIAMS THE EVANGELIST

His Stirring Address at the Methodist Protestant Church Last Night Was Largely Attended.

HIS ORIGINAL SAYINGS

Will Speak on the Subject of "Conscience" at the Y. M. C. A. Auditorium Friday Night.

Tonight at 7:30 o'clock Billy Williams, "the Drummer Evangelist," will speak in the First Christian church, corner Tenth and Blondeau streets. His subject will be "Our Attorney."

The drummer preacher seems to be winning his way into the hearts and confidence of the people. Many members of the churches of the city are much in evidence in the meetings. Last evening he spoke to a crowded house in the Methodist Protestant church upon the subject, "From Rags to Robes." The sermon was drawn from the story of the prodigal who went into a far country and joined himself to a citizen of that country.

BILLY WILLIAMS

The citizen proved to be the man who knew all about the places of sin. He spent all and then he awoke, he came to himself. Then he started for home, and his father met him. God will meet the man who surrenders himself to His cause.

A few original sayings of the evangelist are quoted below:

"Girls don't chew gum on the streets of your city. If you must chew, try the rag."

"Don't believe the fellow who says he loves every hair on your head. What about those on your dresser?"

"Don't flirt with that handsome fellow on the street, his wife may not like it."

"You can pick up a man on the street corner, but find your future husband in your mother's parlor."

"Privileges and freedom come to women because of the gospel. Where the gospel is not preached woman is a slave to the law and to man."

"Woman was the last at the cross, the first at the grave and the first preached to by a resurrected Christ.

"Woman led man out of Paradise. She should make it her business to lead him back again."

"The training that best fits a girl for heaven, best fits her for this life. Anything that unfits for glory, unfits to live on earth."

"Girls, men don't think much of you with your waists moved down three or four inches below where God intended it should be, and with the heels of your shoes throwing your body into a kangaroo shape."

"Men are not looking for a doll baby. They can get a doll for 25 cents."

"If you are looking for a man in the common acceptance of the term, you can pick one up on almost any street corner, but street corner loafers are poor material out of which to make husbands."

Friday Night.

On Friday night Evangelist Williams will speak at a men's meeting in the auditorium of the Young Men's Christian Association building at eight o'clock, subject "Conscience." Every man is invited to take advantage of this Friday night meeting to hear the evangelist.

"Conscience is one of the most solemn words in the English language it was born in the Garden of Eden when Adam and Eve ate of the forbidden fruit. It is the self knowledge battle field of the soul, God in man, bell of the engine; the sign-board at the crossing."

"Conscience trained by the standard cannot be bullied, bribed or cheated. Conscience is not a measuring stick to measure the conduct of others. Conscience compels men to recognize God. Carnegie says that it is a voice inside. It is the voice that said to Adam 'Where art thou?' and to Cain, 'Where is thy brother?'"

Men's Bible Class.

The first session of the men's Bible class at the Young Men's Christian Association will convene Friday night of this week. For the men who desire it a twenty-five cent supper will be served at 6:30 o'clock, the class coming together for the lesson at 7:00 o'clock. The Book of Isaih by Professor Robinson of Chicago will be studied. Men of the city are invited to join this men's class.

WILL CHOOSE CANDIDATE TWICE

O. C. Herminghausen Will be Nominated for Judge by Democratic Central Committee Tomorrow.

IMPROPERLY CERTIFIED

Failure to Notify State Official Makes Second Selection of Candidate for Judge Necessary.

Legally there is no candidate for judge of the first judicial district on the democratic ticket but tomorrow O. C. Herminghausen will be named for the place by the democratic central committee when it meets at Ft. Madison.

The tangle is the result of a failure to properly certify the nomination by the democrats of O. C. Herminghausen as the candidate of the party for district judge in Lee county.

The convention which nominated Herminghausen furnished signers for his petition also but it was filed only with the county auditor. No certification whatever was made to Secretary of State W. C. Hayward. Accordingly, when the certified lists were issued by the secretary of state, Herminghausen's name did not appear in them. Lee county democrats immediately telegraphed the secretary of state asking why he was left out and were informed of their error.

A petition was at once signed up and forwarded to the secretary of state but he has now refused to file it on the grounds that it comes too late. According to D. F. Miller, of this city, the nomination of Mr. Herminghausen will be made under a section in the Iowa code which provides that if a place becomes vacant the central committee has the right to select a candidate for the position, certify its choice and the secretary of state will certify the candidate back to the county auditor.

The tangle will not affect the candidacy of Mr. Herminghausen in any way but illustrates the many pitfalls under the present election laws.

GREAT LESSONS TAUGHT IN ART

Turner Free Traveling Art Exhibits Now on Display at the George Washington School

LESSON IN PICTURES

The Great Masters in Painting and Art Contribute This Interesting and Ennobling Exhibit.

The citizens of Keokuk, especially the art-loving people of the city, must be gratified at the splendid opportunity afforded them of seeing and studying the excellent diplay of pictures of the Turner Free Traveling Art Exhibits now being shown in the rooms of the George Washington public school building. It is a wonderful display of the two hundred most famous masterpieces in painting, sculpture and architecture. This collection of two hundred has been selected with great care by competent critics. Others might discard some of the numbers in this collection and put others in their place, but it would prove a difficult task. Around this group of subjects have been placed the most interesting modern paintings, forming the most pleasing effect. Included in this exhibit are the Turner brown, gray and hand-colored prints. All these afford a most interesting study and nobody can walk through the picture-lined walls of the Washington school without feeling the ennobling influence that these pictures afford.

The pictures in the rooms are graded to suit the tastes and the capacity of the students but all are pleasing to both old and young. Not only is entertainment afforded in seeing these pictures but the educational, patriotic, religious, moral and home-loving lessons taught by their study is of incalcuable value. His learning will be enhanced in a broad way by the historical views present in the highest touch of art. Patriotism will receive a new enthusiasm from the "Spirit of '76," the "Minute Men," "Washington Crossing the Delaware" and like gems. Religious fervor will be kindled in viewing the splendid Bible scenes by Hofman and others, the Madonnas and numerous other prints taken from holy writ. The home-loving instincts will be aroused by many of the scenes. Bonheut's beautiful animal consceptions, with Landseer, Murillo, Douglas and others contribute their wonderful pictures to this splendid exhibit.

Then there are old buildings, mossy with age, some of them crumbling, famous so long that "the memory of man runneth not to the contrary," which may be seen and studied with an interest not often given to the people of Keokuk.

No matter whether a man or woman or child has a tendency toward art, for art's sake, or not, there will be many pictures in this unusually fine exhibit that will touch the heart and cause one to leave the building with a higher thought, a kindlier feeling and a better aim in life. It is a moral lecture, a sermon in pictures wrought by the combined efforts of the master architects, master painters and master sculptors of the ages. Can any lecture or sermon be greater or teach a loftier lesson? Parents should not only attend but encourage their children to see and study these pictures. It will be one of the sweetest entertainments and the most uplifting of any other which is likely to be shown in Keokuk in a long time.

The exhibition was opened this afternoon at 3:30 o'clock and will exhibit again at 7:30 o'clock this evening. Tomorrow afternoon there will be also two exhibitions at the same hours. Saturday the exhibit will be given at 2:30 in the afternoon and at 7:30 o'clock in the evening.

BLACK AND WHITE CAN NEVER BE EQUALS

den of sorrow would be easier to bear, and I would feel that her death had not been in vain."

Mrs. David Terry, widowed mother of Etta Duryea-Johnson, the white wife of Jack Johnson, who shot herself in Chicago September 12, made this statement today, believing it to be her christian duty, she said, to help Mrs. Cameron drive the black pugilist from the city and country. Mrs. Terry was seen in her home in Brooklyn where she lives, broken in health, and under the constant care of a physician.

The reporter had carried to Mrs. Terry the story of the Chicago grand jury's investigation into Johnson's alleged kidnaping of Lucile Cameron; of the girl's mother's fight for her daughter, and had finished by asking:

"Mrs. Terry, what, in your opinion, should be done with the husband of your dead daughter?"

"It would be wrong for me to tell you what ought to be done," she replied, her voice hardening. "It is not for me to judge. God will do that, but every night a prayer goes up from my pillow asking God to send upon this man the punishment he deserves. Two weeks ago I had a vision of Jack Johnson's end. I believe that vision was God's promise of its fulfillment.

The Mother's Vision.

"In a vision as plain as day, I saw a boat on a beautiful stream. In that boat was my daughter glorified in white, talking to my dead husband. Suddenly out of the water rose a giant glistening black man. It was Jack Johnson. With both hands he grabbed for the boat as if he would crush it, but he missed; my daughter rowed away, and disappeared with a ripple of happy laughter on her lips. Then the water turned as black as ink and swallowed the black man up.

"It was all so real that it frightened me, though I am a practical woman, and not given to visions."

"Is it true that your daughter's married life with Johnson was unhappy?" the reporter asked.

"There can be but one reply to that," the mother answered. "She killed herself. Why she married him has always been a mystery to me, though Etta was never right in her mind and I have attributed many things to that fact. And I believe her suicide came at a period, not of temporary madness, but of extreme lucidness."

"Was Johnson cruel to her?"

"No one will ever know how cruel," Mrs. Terry replied in the same low, tired voice. "She was mortally afraid of him. She ran away not long before she killed herself, hiding in a hotel near Chicago. Johnson set detectives after her, found her and had her brought back. I have seen her with her eyes black and bruises on her face. Before she left for Paris she told me she would rather die than go.

"When Etta shot herself, I was prostrated, but went to Chicago with my daughter Arline. We stayed at a hotel and not at Johnson's house, as the papers stated. When we went to Etta's home to see her I begged the negro to grant me one request: I wanted the body of my dead girl. He refused. He said he was the husband of the girl and would stick to his rights. I told him he would forget, but that a mother never could. He said he was going to give Etta a funeral which could not afford.

"He wanted me to ride about Chicago in his automobile. I refused. On the front porch of his house, in front of which a battery of newspaper photographers had lined up, when I passed out with a Red Cross nurse on one side and my daughter on the other, he pushed my daughter aside, so he could have his picture taken at my side, making it appear that I was leaning on his arm.

"He forced his company upon us like that until we left Chicago. I told him I could not and would not go with him or his crowd to the church or cemetery. After Arline and I got in an automobile which we were told was for us, Johnson climbed in. Shamed, humbled, I pulled down the curtains. Johnson let them up. Arline pulled them down again and again Johnson lifted them so the crowd could see us together and photographers could take our pictures.

"On the way to the cemetery, by the side of the grave on the way back, at our hotel, at the railway station, in the train itself, he pursued us relentlessly. He sat on the arm of Arline's chair in the car, and said so everybody could hear him: 'I'll forgive, you, Arline, for the way you treated me today.'

"It was not because he loved us that he did all that. He did it for show. I have kept silent because I wanted the world to forget the tragedy. I can never forget it, but I don't care for myself now, and I am willing to bear further humiliation if I can keep some other girl from going the way my daughter went; if I can save one other daughter from a similar tragedy. If I could feel that I am thus doing some good my own burden of sorrow would oppress me less, and I would know that my daughter's life and death had not been in vain."

BECKER'S FATE IS WITH JURY

declared Police Lieutenant Charles Becker as he settled into his seat in the criminal court today. The summing-up was over. Becker had heard himself painted as a stalwart American officer, who had done only his duty as he saw it, and has listened unmoved to the most bitter arraignment an accused murderer ever received in a New York court. But the jail officials said he slept unmoved, and today, when he entered court to hear the final summing-up, and interpretation of the law affecting his case by Justice Goff, he was as unmoved as when, as head of the strong-arm squad, he went smashing through the tenderloin of the city.

The verdict may come today. The general impression about the courtroom was that the jury would reach an agreement, but there were some of the old-timers, who insisted that the conflict in the evidence, and the character of the summing-up, was such that a difference of opinion among the twelve men was certain to result.

This is admittedly the best, and at the same time, the most independent jury that has been brought together in a murder trial in this city since the famous Molineux ordeal, and it was certain that every man would vote for the verdict his conscience dictated no matter what action the others might consider wise. Because of this the chances of a disagreement were excellent in the opinion of the old-timers.

The jury was brought into court at 10:30 and the doors locked so that Justice Goff might deliver his charge without any outside interruption.

Justice Goff's charge was lengthy. He overlooked few details. In a deliberate voice he reeled off the law pertaining to the case as it concerned the jury. He read the definitions of first and second degree murder and informed the jurymen that they could bring in a verdict, if they judged the defendant guilty, of either degree.

"I will not read the definitions of the degrees of manslaughter unless counsel for the defense so desires," Justice Goff added, turning to Becker's counsel.

"We do not ask it," McIntyre replied.

Justice Goff directed that Becker might be found guilty of second degree murder if the jury found that there was no premeditation. But if it was found that sufficient time elapsed between the order to kill and murder, for the order to be withdrawn, then deliberation and premeditation were there.

The case as outlined by the court for the benefit of the jury was as follows:

1—Becker expressed a desire to Rose for Rosenthal's death.

2—That Rose acted on such instructions.

3—That men under Rose, acting on the design, had Rosenthal killed.

"If Becker did this then he is guilty of first degree murder," Justice Goff went on. "It matters not whether he had any communication afterwards with Rose. If the state has proven the case as I have stated it, then Becker is guilty."

To the Jury.

NEW YORK, Oct. 24.—The fate of Police Lieutenant Charles Becker is in the hands of the jury.

At precisely 1:55 o'clock Justice Goff concluded his charge to the twelve men who are to pronounce the defendant guilty of the murder of the gambler Herman Rosenthal, or declare him innocent, and give him back his freedom.

The charge was long and was made in an even, passionless voice, but those who heard it seemed impressed with its justice and fairness. And from it the jury has little chance of doing other than returning a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree or one freeing the defendant entirely.

The Grain Market.

[United Press Leased Wire Service.]

CHICAGO, Oct. 24.—Following a sharp decline in wheat prices in Liverpool and other European markets, the local wheat pit transaction today were at a lower figure from the start. There was a steadier feeling in Europe and less fear of closure of the Dardanelles.

Corn futures opened ¼ off and continued dull.

Oats lost slightly during the early trading. Business was in small volume.

Provisions opened strong and fell off during the later hours.

AMUSEMENTS.

"As You Like It."

A Shakesperian special feature at the Grand tomorrow. The patrons of the Grand are always favored with the best in the amusement line not only in combinations but pictures as well. The Shakesperian special feature "As You Like It," in three reels is indeed a work of art and the character impersonated with the best talent of the big Vitagraph company. Miss Rose Coghlin and Mr. Maurice Costello, two of the Vitagraph favorites taking the leading parts. It's a production that every lover of Shakespeare's work should see. Another popular school children's matinee will be given Saturday at 2:30. Any school scholar will be admitted for 5c.—Adv.

A Legal Mind.

To absorb shocks that might destroy tungsten electric lamps suspended by cords there has been invented a wire spring with hooks at each end to engage the cord.

Keyes to Meet Smith.

NEW YORK, Oct. 24.—Bert Keyes has been matched to box Barney Smith of England here Saturday night. If victorious he will meet Knockout Brown a week later.
