BIRTH.

CAMPBELL—In this city, March 17th, to the wife of James Campbell, Esq., a daughter.

FIREARMS IN THE HANDS OF SOUTH SEA ISLANDETS.

The Chronicle has something to say in its issue of the 27th February about South Sea laborers who, before returning from the Hawaiian Islands to their homes, had purchased firearms and made bad use of them in their own country. The Chronicle says these men were held in slavery in these Islands and, apparently, did not see the contradiction involved in its statements. The men were well-paid laborers, and that they were not slaves, but freemen, was shown by the fact that they all had large sums of money in their possession, some of which they laid out in purchasing articles that they thought would be useful to them in their own country: amongst these purchases were American fire-arms. The writer was in Honolulu and saw these men before they sailed. Their purchase of guns and ammunition attracted attention at the time and the Immigration Commissioners investigated the matter, and found that there was no law by which they could interfere with the purchase of fire-arms by South Sea Islanders, and that he was as free to spend his money as he liked as a Hawaiian subject or a citizen of any other foreign country. While these purchases were deplored by the Hawaiian Government, it had to acknowledge that these men and all others are free to spend their earnings as they chose. So much for the last phase of the Hawaiian slavery question.—S.F. Merchant.
