COMMENT AND SUGGESTIONS BY UNITED MINE WORKERS

Washington, Oct. 29.—A committee representing the United Mine Workers of America, has filed with the United States coal commission investigating the industry a report containing comment and suggestions. The document, made public today, is signed by Ellis Searles, editor of the union's magazine, John Moore, its legislative representative and Thomas Kennedy, a Pennsylvania district president of the organization and seeks to lay before the commission the union's idea of how it should conduct its investigation, and the objectives to be attained.

Absentee ownership of coal mining areas, the intrusion of profit-taking middlemen in marketing, regulation of coal production, and the survey of transportation and storage facilities available for coal distribution, the report emphasized, should be investigated by the commission. On a number of subjects about which the commission asked views, the committee withheld comment, asking further time for study, but gave assurance that all available information would be presented when called for.

"The commission, through its own avenues, should investigate the extent to which absentee ownership prevails in the coal industry," the report said. "We believe this is an evil that has much to do with the strained relations and unfortunate conditions which exist in the industry.

"We believe that the commission should ascertain why it is that the price of coal to the domestic consumer is always higher than the price to railroads and other large purchasers. We believe this line could be developed if the commission would inquire into railroad coal contracts and the methods by which such contracts are made."

In seeking production cost figures, the report suggested the commission should take the question of investment to see whether "capitalization is water upon which the coal consumer is required to pay interest and dividends," as well as wages.

"The commission should ascertain the actual mine cost of production," it added, and then compare that cost with the price which the consumer pays and find out who gets the money represented by these two figures."

On the point of labor costs, the committee asked the commission to consider the accounts of representative mines in all sections of the country, and to refrain from "giving conclusive consideration to the rate of wages of the mine worker pay day, but consider the amount of his annual earnings."

Irregularity of production, waste of coal in mining operations, and transportation methods, it was declared, put heavy charges against coal production and deserve attention.

"We believe figures show there should be a much greater supply of coal cars in the country," the report said, with reference to transportation "and the commission should ascertain the facts and make such recommendation as will remedy this condition."

"We suggestion that the commission inquire fully into the practicability and advisability of recommending the creation of some sort of system for the storage of coal."

The committee declared the commission should not hesitate to make recommendations affecting the jurisdiction of the interstate commerce commission over coal freight rates, if found to be necessary.

AUTOS IN MIDNIGHT CRASH ON ROAD AT TAFTVILLE STATION

With a crash that aroused many in the neighborhood, two automobiles came together about midnight Saturday on Norwich avenue at its junction with Hunter's avenue, just south of Taftville station on the trolley line. The cars were driven by John Keenan of 40 Forest street and Alleck Lopato of 222 1-2 West Main street, this city.

Of the fourteen persons in the two cars, consisting of four young women in the Loparto car and three men and three young women in the Keenan car, none were injured, but both cars were badly damaged. The cars were going in opposite directions at the time of the collision. They present the unusual feature of each car being damaged on its right side.

When they came to a stop, the Keenan car which had been coming towards the city stood across the south-bound trolley track with its front end nearly on the north-bound track and the Loparto car at a 45 degree angle against the right side of the Keenan car.

All the men in the two machines have been summoned to appear in the Norwich police court this (Monday) morning, following a charge made to the police by Keenan that the driver of the other car was under the influence of liquor and was driving recklessly.

Keenan, who was driving the Cadillac touring car belonging to his uncle, Henry C. Marx, was returning towards this city and had with him William Barry, Alfred Ziegelmayer and three Norwich young women. In the car driven by Loparto, which was going towards Taftville were Mary Lopato, Bennie Zabrie, Bennie Jasman and four young women.

Immediately after the crash Keenan telephoned to Norwich police headquarters asking that officers be sent to arrest the Loparto party as he charged that they were all drunk. Capt. D. J. Twomey sent out Sergeant John H. Kane, Officers Peter Driscoll, John O'Neil and P. Murphy, the last named driving the new Nash auto police patrol. They brought the men from both machines to police headquarters.

There Keenan stated that he was driving down Norwich avenue on the right hand side when he saw the Loparto car in front of him and in the gutter at Lopato's left, with the car slowing up and apparently about to stop. Keenan claimed that he slowed up also and that the other car came almost to a stop until his car was close to it when it suddenly turned sharply towards him. He swung his car then to his left to try to keep away but the Loparto car's right forward wheel struck his right forward wheel and mudguard, twisting him around sideways across the trolley tracks.

The Loparto car had its right headlight bent backwards, mudguard doubled up, and axle probably bent. The Keenan car had an axle bent, bumper twisted and partly torn off, mudguard bent and dented, and running board broken besides other damage.

Both cars were pushed off to the side of the road to clear the highway for travel. Mr. Ziegelmayer stayed with the Keenan car while the other two men went to police headquarters.

FIRE APPARATUS NEAR COLLISION IN FRANKLIN SQUARE

While responding to an alarm from Box 261 Saturday morning about 3 o'clock, the old Pope-Hartford truck of Engine Co. No. 4, from the Main street station, driven by John Lynch, and the hook and ladder truck and pumper, Engine Co. No. 1, from the Central station, with Michael Clifford driving, came close to a collision in Franklin square which was only avoided by Driver Lynch turning his truck into a pile of planks at the Disco building at the corner of Main and Ferry streets. The truck came to a stop with all four wheels resting on the planks that had been thrown over floor girders in the Disco building that is under construction. The hook and ladder truck kept on to answer the fire alarm.

When the two pieces of apparatus reached the square there were two trolley cars standing in front of the car office, and because of congestion at Young's corner Driver Clifford with the ladder truck was unable to hug the corner as he came around from Bath street, but swung diagonally across the square, which brought him into the path of the Main street company, coming past the car office. Driver Lynch slamped on the brokes and swerved to the right to avoid a smash. The Pope went off the road and barely grazing the heavy iron upright came to a stop with all four wheels inside the building. None of the firemen were injured.

Only the fact that the workmen on the Disco block had piled lumber over the cellar girders prevented the truck from dropping down into the opening, which would have damaged the truck greatly and possibly caused injuries to the men on the truck.

The firemen were immediately busy on the job of getting the truck back out of the building and with the aid of the repair car of the Southern New England Telephone company was hauled back on to the street. Driver Lynch handled his car well under the circumstances and his quick work prevented a possible loss of life and greater damage to the trucks. As it is, the Pope is ready for business today the same as before, the only damage being a bent right front fender, where it grazed the girder, and a slightly weakened standing board on the rear, which was immediately repaired. The total damage was not over $15.

The accident, which was an unusual one, was viewed by many early risers on Saturday morning, all of whom agreed that luck pure and simple was with the firemen arrived flames were shooting from under the telegraph pole and the iron girder of the building.

Aside from some split timber, the building was not damaged, as far as could be seen.

The fire call was for a fire in a shed owned by John Sikowski of 9 Cooper street, cause unknown, and when the firemen arrived flames were shooting from the roof and sides, there being no chance to save the shed. The contents, which included about three cords of wood and a quantity of tools, were destroyed. The firemen did what they could and watched to see that the fire did not spread to the house near by.

The shed is north of the old Davis slaughter house and the nearest hydrant was about 1,000 feet distant.

They were advised as to the law and promised not to violate it in the future.

SERMON SHOWS VILLAIN IN BIBLICAL DRAMA

Previous to the evening service at Trinity Methodist Episcopal church Sunday the Norwich Mandolin club entertained with several numbers which were greatly appreciated by the congregation.

The sermon of the evening, The Villain of the Play, delivered by Rev. Robert L. Roberts, pastor, was the second in the series of three sermons on an old drama that was acted in real life as old in the Book of Esther.

Last Sunday, said Rev. Dr. Roberts, I told you about the heroine of the drama, Queen Esther. Tonight by story is of the villain, Haman, an exile who by his smooth manners has won his way into the friendship of King Ahasuerus, until he has been placed next to the king in power, higher in government than any of the nobles and princes, a man of unlimited power. Every wish he expressed was granted. He was not worthy of all this, and he knew it, but was a vain little man, with a soul swelled up with the thoughts of the powers he had grasped.

There was one man in the land who saw through him, knew him for what he really was, and this man, Mordecai, refused to bow and kneel before him as he passed, as did all others in the kingdom, even to the princes. This made Haman angry, and he determined some day to break this man who dared to hold himself so high and refuse to do him homage.

Knowing that the king would give him all he asked, he went before him and said that in the kingdom were people who did not worship like the king, who refused to abide by the laws, and differed in too many ways with the people of the king. He asked for a decree to put these people to death, saying that he would write it if the king would sign it. As always, the king agreed with his friend, and gave him this power.

At this point the heroine of the drama comes in and Queen Esther, knowing of what was to befall her people, risked her own life and went before the king, being saved from death only at the hand of King Ahasuerus. Esther was too wise to ask the king for what she most desired, but as a woman knows what is best, she invited the king and Haman to feast with her the following night, and the king accepted.

That night the king and Haman went to the banquet and, after eating, the king, who suspected something, said "What is it you want of me?" Esther was too wise to ask but made the request that the king and Haman come again on the following night.

As Haman went out of the building his head began to swell and he thought to himself: "How great am I, that only the king and I are asked to banquet with Queen Esther." The thought of this great power filled him and he walked on air. At the portal he met Mordecai, who refused even to show that he saw Haman, and this made Haman hate him and robbed the evening of all its pleasure.

Arriving home that night, he called his people out and bragged to them about his attending a banquet with the king, but ended by saying: "But what is this when Mordecai fails to show me respect." Mordecai was the only bitter drag in his cup of glory, and this spoiled it all.

One of his people then thought of a scheme and said: "Why not build a scaffold and tomorrow morning go to the king and ask for Mordecai to put him to death?" This had not occurred to Haman, but as soon said it was done and that night a scaffold 80 feet high was built in his yard, and he dreamed of what would take place the next morning, when he could mock at and scorn Mordecai as he hanged.

However, King Ahasuerus, who had probably eaten too much at the banquet, found that sleep would not come to him and called for his secretary to read the court records to him until sleep came. This the secretary did and as the king was nearly asleep read about a man named Mordecai who had discovered a plot against the life of the king and gave the news to the king, saving his life. The king then asked if anything had been done to repay Mordecai for this act, and received a reply that nothing had been done.

The following morning Haman, chuckling in glory over what he would soon do to Mordecai, rushed at daybreak to the court and awaited the king. Here came the comedy in the play, for when the king learned that Haman was in the court he asked him in and said: "What should be done for a man the king most desired to honor?" Haman, the selfish wretch, he was thinking it could be none other than himself, said: "Dress him in thy royal robes, mount him upon thy horse, and have the highest of nobles lead him about the city, proclaiming 'Thus shall be done with the man the king desires to honor'." In saying this Haman wanted further to blow up his mean little soul by taking added glory to himself.

The king replied: "Go, then, to one, a Jew named Mordecai, and do as thou hast said." Haman was forced to gown Mordecai in the royal robes and go about the city as he had told the king should be done.

When it was done Haman was ashamed to be seen and slunk home. Night came and where the night before he had gloried in going to the banquet, he dreaded it this time, but dared not refuse; so went, walking with feet that seemed like lead. Again the banquet was enjoyed and the king asked Queen Esther what she desired.

Arising, Queen Esther asked the king if she was not dear to him, and asked that he tell her what he believed of her. The king replied that she was dear to him and that anything she asked for, even unto half of his kingdom, would be granted.

"Then spare my life and the lives of my people," she asked, "for there is going out a decree that we must all be slain."

The king demanded to know who had done this outrage, and Queen Esther pointed at Haman and proclaimed him as the man. The king was in great wrath and went out of the hall. Soon he returned and, although Haman begged for mercy, had him seized and as the story goes Haman was hanged on the very 88-foot gallows that he had built for Mordecai and Mordecai was taken by the king and given a place next to him in power.

In this story, said Rev. Mr. Roberts, we learn that sin makes a person reckless, that stepping for power in sin makes one stop at nothing, they cheat and kill to gain the goal. Again that sin in the end destroys that which it is trying to make and spoils everything it tries to aid.

Oatmeal —a "new dish"

This has solved the oatmeal problem in thousands of homes. Stew raisins and mix with the cereal after it is cooked. Add the raisin juice also.

The raisins furnish mineral salts and valuable food-iron.

But best of all, they make oatmeal attractive with the lure of healthful sweets.
