Weekly State Sentinel.

Sebastopol and the War.

Our exchanges are filled with the late accounts of the fall of Sebastopol, and teem with editorial speculation upon the probable and permanent effect of the temporary success of the Allied Armies. Whatever opinion we may express in this matter will be founded, first upon our ideas of the Russian character, as placed upon the basis of the traditional characteristics of the people, and secondly, by our estimate of the relative strength of the belligerant powers, taking into consideration the physical force and natural advantages of each.

The presistant stubbornness of the Russian character, the undaunted courage of the Russian soldiery, and the never dying loyalty of the Russian people, are matters so generally prominent as to require only a reference in connection with what we are about to say. The pride of the Czar will never be humbled, so long as he continues to reign the sovereign of the souls as well as of the bodies of his people. With from sixty to eighty millions of persons under his dominion, with unparralelled resources of support to an army, and a country possessing the peculiar varieties of climate and landscape which render it almost inaccessible to foreign aggression, the probabilities would be, independent of late occurrences, that ALEXANDER and his successors might indulge their arrogance and continue their accustomed aggressions, with few if any very material molestation from abroad.

To come to the point, however, of how the matter stands with ALEXANDER now, a very little reflection will show that he has no cause for alarm, and that his position to-day is ten thousand times more advantageous, and less embarrassing than that of the Allies.—Sebastopol has fallen—the Russian ships have been sunk, and many important works and fortifications destroyed. But a hundred thousand veteran, war-hardened soldiers still remain in the Crimea, to conquer. Aided by the formidable and almost impregnable heights of the country back, and protected by natural and artificial fortifications, their soldiers can still resist any effort of the Allied forces to march into the interior, and are more likely to recuperate and drive the Allies to their ships, than to be disbanded or further repulsed.

The Russians will not evacuate the Crimea. They are strongly fortified from Sevastopol north, and each way from the Alma river, and with the advantage of approaching winter, could harass the enemy and utterly destroy any force that would attempt their subjugation.—The Allied Armies will have all they can do to take care of themselves—to guard against becoming the besieged, and to prepare for parrall comfort during the dreary winter. They have taken Sevastopol—have done some brilliant fighting, performed gallant achievements, won a great battle, and saved their credit-and preserved England and France from disgrace in the eyes of the military world. Having done this, at a sacrifice of tens of thousands of lives and millions of money, they are no better off than before a single battle was fought. They will fill the world with the gossimer glitter of the achievements of their armies, and offer to treat with Russia on better terms than have yet been proposed. It was necessary for the credit of England and France that their military forces should make a show of triumph. This one thing, the protection of themselves against mortification, is what has caused the desperate and persistent struggle before Sevastopol. The Allied Nations may now offer to negotiate on new terms without dishonor—and the coming winter will see these negotiations pushed forward with unwonted vigor.

TO THE VOTERS OF INDIANA.

The election Tuesday next, the ninth day of the present month, is one which should engage the attention and careful consideration of every citizen of the State of Indiana. Though comparatively but few offices are to be filled upon that day, the election is by no means an occurrence of minor importance. The people are called upon, not only to express their choice of the men that shall hold the offices to be filled, but they are asked to indicate by their ballots their views upon a principle in which is involved all the liberties of our government.

It becomes Democrats, then, and all men who love the Country and the Union, to reflect, and reflect maturely; to act, and act boldly in the present crisis. While we strike for principle,—for the rights of the many against the usurpations of the few—for those political rights guaranteed to us by the Constitution of the Union—for those religious rights handed down to us through that sacred instrument baptised by the blood of our Revolutionary sires—for the freedom of the will, freedom to act and freedom to think,—while we strike for these things, let us remember, that we are contending with fanaticism and resisting bigotry—that the foul and pestilential breath of Abolitionism has swept over our plains—that the secret oath-bound jacobin, of the school of the French Revolution, is among us, a dark and putrid reptile, ready to crush with its deadly folds or poison with its aspen fangs,—let us remember the cowardice of those that strike us in the dark, the tyranny of those that rule the midnight conclave, the serfdom of the soul-forsaken wretches that obey their secret master's will, and then let us be up and doing, and with a nerve and determination worthy of the justice of our cause, let us sweep from a political existence the miserable pretenders, whose midnight machinations are desolation to our hearths, and whose incendiary principles already tarnish the fair escutcheon of our country's history.

Let the Democracy remember,—let all honest men remember, that the canvass of the present is the canvass of the future—that the issues of to-day are the issues of to-morrow—that the campaign of fifty-five is the commencement that of fifty-six—that the victories of this year are the forerunners to those of the next, which are destined to sweep the country as with the voice of many waters and place in triumph on our watch towers, from Maine to Georgia, the glorious emblems of truth and justice, the rights of the people and the rights of the States, the Democratic party and the National Union.

Again we say to the honest sovereigns of our free and indepent soil—a soil on which no tyrant ever dared to tread in day light, stand by your principles;—come to the polls on Tuesday next and vote your rebuke of fanaticism—your rebuke of secrecy in politics; your rebuke of incendiarism and rapine and devastation,—come to the polls and vote to sustain the Constitution, to sustain the peace of the country and the laws of the land, and then sleep—sleep when the battle is fought and the victory is ours.

☞Geo H. Boker, a young American poet, has just produced a new play entitled "Francisca Da Rimini," which has been very successfully put on the stage at the New York; theatre Davenport as the hero.

"Knowest thou the import one of a soul immortal?
Behold the midnight glory—worlds on worlds;
Then thousand orbs, and twice ten thousand more;
Then weigh the whole: one soul outweighs them all."
