DAILY CRESCENT.

We publish the following for the benefit of our whig friends now in office. We hope they will learn it thoroughly before April of 1853:

INS AND OUTS.

I'm out of cash, and so of course
I've pocket room to let;
I'm out of patience, just because
I'm never out of debt.
Besides, I'm dreadfully in love,
And more than half in doubt
Which is the greater evil, that
Of being in or out!

I'm deeply in my tailor's books,
But I don't mind a dun;
And if I wasn't out of funds
I'd pay him out of fun!
He always gave me "fits" he said,
But heaven bless his eyes;
Twould put him in a fit, I guess,
He'd be in such surprise.

I'm out at elbows, in distress—
In sooth, a sorry tale!
I'm out of favor, out of sorts,
But, then, I'm out of jail.
My landlord says my time is out,
And thinks I'd better "skin,"
I'm such an out and outer, he
Won't have me in his inn.

I'm out of office, but in hopes
To get put in some day;
If I don't "run for something" soon,
I'll have to run away.
I'm out of spirits, and I'm out
Of more than I can think;
I'm out of temper; hang the pen!
Ye gods!—I'm out of ink! [Boston Post.

MY FIRST CASE.

BY WILLIAM.

I commenced practice in Burlington, Iowa; but being a stranger in a place already well supplied with lawyers, my youth and inexperience (I am not very old yet) was a kind of safeguard to protect me from business in general, and all important cases in particular.

About ten days before the October term of the court, an Irishman, whom I will distinguish by calling Majors, was arrested and confined in jail for an assault with an attempt to kill his wife. The attending physician said it was doubtful if she ever recovered—that she had apparently been beaten with a stick as large as an axe-handle—that her head and spine were injured, some of the ribs broken, a hand crushed, and an arm broken in two places. Great indignation was felt by every one, and it was afterwards remembered that I was heard to say that "the lawyer who would try to clear him ought to be sent to the Penitentiary for life." Some of the more impetuous proposed that lest he might be cleared, it would be better not to wait for a trial, but muster sufficient force to take him out of jail, and hang him up like a dog to the first tree. Mrs. Majors was said to be a very beautiful woman, and he having been known as a worthless drunkard for several years, accounted for the strong feeling in the case.

And here I will remark, that whatever may be the faults of Western men, they are never wanting in sympathy for the suffering, and more especially where a beautiful women has been the victim of cruelty and oppression. And could you lift the curtain which family pride throws over deeds of blood in the South and West, you would find that in more than half of these cases, the bowie knife leaped from its scabbard in defence of woman whose rights had been outraged. Public opinion, that mighty engine which can kill or make alive, throws its weight into the balance, and it is next to impossible to find a jury who will convict of murder, however premeditated or cold-blooded, if done in defence of woman!

A very remarkable case in point occurred in St. Louis in the summer of 1850.

H—, with his bride of a few days, was spending the honey moon at the Planters' House, when he one day found his wife in agony of tears. She had been grossly insulted by one W—, a stranger who was stopping at the hotel, and although that insult had been by words only, yet so keenly was she alive to a sense of honor, that the proud heart of Southern beauty seemed crushed forever. Burning for revenge, the young husband rushed madly from the house in quest of the wretch who would thus wantonly insult a being so pure. Entering an iron store on Main street, he approached a genteel looking man of about thirty-five, saying,

"Are you Mr. W—?"

"I am, sir," was his reply, and last words, for at that moment a bowie knife gleamed at his breast, and, sinking deep into his heart, W— fell to the ground a livid corpse!

It was afterwards discovered that W— was only an assumed name, and that he was the villain who had basely deserted his wife in Cincinnati the year previous, and taken boarding at the Railroad House, where the injured wife called on him, but meeting with his guilty paramour, stabbed her to the heart at a single plunge. She was tried for the murder, and acquitted on grounds of insanity, (?) but was so fortunate as to be permanently cured after a residence of three months at the Insane Asylum!

To avoid universal loathing and hate, after the result of the trial was known, he had secretly left Cincinnati, and under the false name of W—, had been at the Planters' House but a few days, when he was thus hurried into eternity, his conscience still loaded with guilt?

H— gave himself into the hands of the officers, was indicted, tried, and acquitted!

But I will not dwell upon isolated cases, for the records are full of like trials and acquittals. And I fancy that if more of this feeling pervaded public opinion in the North, there would be fewer cases of broken vows and hopes destroyed. Fear of summary vengeance, alone can hold in check the heartless wretch whom nothing good can influence.

Then at least we might hope to be rid of the loathsome reptile who conceals his fangs beneath the smiles of deceit and the polish of education; whose presence is contamination, whose touch is pollution; whose pathway may be traced by agony and desolation, and who, under the guise of friendship, invades the domestic circle of unsuspecting innocence, to crush the fondest hope and destroy the brightest dream of youth. But I did not sit down to moralize, and hope I shall be pardoned this degression.

Court came on: Majors was indicted and brought up for arraignment. Not a friend sympathised with him; not a lawyer sought his defence. The court room was crowded, and as he entered, every eye was turned upon him. Apparently about twenty-eight years old, he was tall and commanding; his handsome countenance naturally pale, was now so touchingly sad, that it was impossible to behold him without interest.

"Have you counsel?" inquired the Court.

"No, your honor; I am too poor to employ any," was his reply in a voice that sounded like "the wail of a broken harp."

"You may select any lawyer you choose, and I will appoint him as your counsel," said the Court.

The poor fellow looked beseechingly upon the stern array of the disciples of Blackstone, and every one except myself, averted his face. Being the junior number of the bar, and wholly inexperienced in practice, I had no thought of being selected in a defence so difficult. After looking a moment, he signified his wish to speak, with me. I approached him and he said,

"Do you think you can clear me?"

"No, sir; I do not."

"Are you willing to try?"

"I shall, I suppose, if the Court appoint me; but I had rather have nothing to do with it."

"Will you undertake the defence, Mr. ——?" said the Court, addressing me.

"I would rather not your honor, for —"

I was here interrupted by half a dozen lawyers crowding up to me and saying, "Go ahead, don't back out," and such like expressions; all willing to escape themselves, and willing to see me "done for" in my first case.

At length I yielded a reluctant consent, appealing to the Court to protect the rights of my client, should I ignorantly neglect them.

After the arraignment and plea of not guilty, the State's Attorney informed me that he was unable to proceed without the testimony of the prisoner's wife, who was not yet out of danger, and in the country some six miles distant—and that unless I would consent to take her deposition, the case must be continued. I appealed to the Court to know the effect of such an agreement upon the rights of the prisoner. The Court gravely replied:

"It will not in the least prejudice his rights, as all objections to the deposition will be reserved for the future decision of the Court."

With this understanding I consented. The terms of the agreement were so entered by the clerk, and a master appointed to take the deposition on the following day.

Next day came and found the State's Attorney, the master and myself at the bedside of Mrs. Majors.

With two little girls by her side—the eldest not more than five years old—lay one of the most beautiful women I had ever seen. As I gazed upon the fair brow, knit with bodily suffering, and listened to the half suppressed moan of that young mother, I turned aside to conceal the tear I could not restrain. It may be unmanly—I know it is weakness—and often subjects me to ridicule; but tears with me will sometimes flow while others appear calm and indifferent.

It was only by the strongest persuasion that we could induce her to be sworn, and then only by assuring her, that her silence would avail her husband nothing, but might be construed more strongly against him, than her positive testimony.

Although she tried every means of evasion, yet she was too conscientious to keep back the truth. Her evidence was conclusive beyond a doubt; and however much anxiety I had hitherto felt to gain "my first case," I was now willing to lose it for the sake of avenging the outrage upon the fair sufferer before me.

When we rose to depart, she requested me to remain behind a short time. I resumed my seat near her bed, and she began:

"You are my husband's lawyer?"

"I am."

"And can you save him?"

"I think not, ma'am."

"He was drunk, sir, and did not know what he was doing."

"The law declares that instead of being an excuse for crime, drunkenness is rather an aggravation. But why are you so anxious for me to save him?"

"He is my husband, my only friend on earth!"

"So much the more outrageous his cruelty."

"O, he has no friend now but his poor dying wife!"

Yielding to her grief, she wept as only woman can, who feels that the last thread of hope is severed. Her poor children nestled closer to her, and joined their tears with hers.

It was a group a Raphael might have envied—that stricken mother, in the graceful abandon of hopeless grief, weeping with those lovely babes, while with her remaining arm (the other had been amputated) she clung to them as the last solace of earth.

"My dear madam," said I, so affected by the scene that I hardly knew what I was saying, "is there anything I can do for you?"

"Yes, if you will."

"I promise you."

"Will you swear it?"

"As God is my judge, I swear to aid you by every means in my power, short of crime!"

"Will you try your utmost to save my husband?"

"I swear it."

"Should he be convicted"—and she shuddered at the bare mention of it—"will you endeavor as soon as we are both gone, for I feel that my days are numbered, and his constitution, already broken down by intemperance, can not long endure the damp walls of a Penitentiary"—again she shuddered as one racked by mortal agony—"will you, I say, try and effect a reconciliation between my poor children and their father?"

"If my life is spared I will do my best."

"If you will open that drawer," said she, pointing to an old fashioned light stand, "you will find a sealed package, without any direction. Take it home with you and read it; preserve it as a secret, and when I am gone, restore it to my children."

I did as she directed, found the package, and bidding her adieu, returned home.

That night I retired early to my room to read this mysterious manuscript. It has now passed from my possession; but I have read it so often that I can give the substance, and much of it the very words, suppressing only the names. It was dated some three months prior, and evidently under a strong presentiment of approaching dissolution. It was nearly as follows:

"MY DEAR CHILDREN—Ere this falls into your hands you will be without a mother. I fear that you will soon be deprived of both your parents; but trusting when we are no more, that your grandfather may atone, by his kindness to you, for his cruelty to your parents, I leave this manuscript as my only legacy, hoping in God that you may search him out and be restored to your rightful possessions. Of my own parents I know but little, save what I have learned since becoming a woman.

"My father was an Irish nobleman, who traced his ancestors for fifty generations. I was the only child, and the last of the race. When six years old, my father was detected in a conspiracy, and compelled to fly his country. He was never heard of more. His property was confiscated, and my poor mother driven away—homeless and friendless. A poor widow whom she had often befriended, took us into her hut, and provided for us as best she could. But my mother rapidly sunk under her weight of grief, and before I was eight years old I was motherless. Lord G——, who had been a friend of my father, then received me into his castle, and reared me up among the servants. Here I was very sad and lonely. Neglected by the family, and treated with harshness by the servants, I had but one friend in the world. This was James G——, the eldest son of the lord. James was a noble, generous boy, twelve years old, and to him I always went for consolation in all my childish griefs. He learned me to read and write, taught me to ride his pony, and built little play-houses for me in the park.

"But I pass over the first five years of my residence at the castle, to the time when I was in my fourteenth and James in his seventeenth year. He was then to go to England to enter college. When the coach drove to the door which was to take him, I ran out to bid him good bye. I could not help crying, and when he came to shake hands with me I could not speak to him. He took both my hands in his and spoke kindly to me. He told me not to cry but be a good girl and learn all I could, and he would soon come back again. Just then Lord G—— came up, and ordered the housekeeper to 'take that little blubbering huzzy into the house.'

"She tore me away from him, and I saw him no more for three years. Long days and sleepless nights followed this separation. But I soon remembered his last words to me, and being allowed access to the library, occupied all my spare time in striving to improve my education.

"At last James returned. I need not describe our meeting. Enough to say, he still loved me. Him I had always loved; and in spite of his father's threats and mother's tears, in less than a year we were married. In a rage his father drove us from the castle. James he disowned and disinherited. But by the assistance of his maiden aunt we were enabled to come to America and settle in Iowa. The country was new and unhealthy. Sickness and poverty soon followed, and like many an erring son of Erin, your father sought to drown his troubles with the intoxicating draught. I thought my heart would break the first time I ever saw him intoxicated. But he was always so kind and I loved him so devotedly, that I had not the heart to chide him. This was the great error of my life; and oh, my dear daughters, should you live to have husbands, guard them against this evil as you would against the Evil One himself. Had I spoken in time, woman's love and woman's influence might have saved him. But now, alas, it is too late! Already the seeds of death are springing up, and I fear that he must soon fill a drunkard's grave. I cannot survive him long, and then, my poor children, you will be alone and friendless. Your father has always been kind to me; but lately when he has been drinking, he looks so wild and acts so very strangely, that I sometimes feel afraid of him.

"A few months since, your grandfather, Lord G——, wrote to your father, saying that if he would leave me behind and take you with him to Ireland, he would forgive all. But your father scorned his offer. I must now finish this history of my life, which has been one of continued trial and suffering.

"When your parents are gone, should you be restored to your rights in the castle of Lord G——, do not forget in your prosperity, that far away across the broad Atlantic, in Iowa, upon the bank of the Mississippi, cold in death, sleep your parents! And now, good bye! May God Almighty bless and protect you. MARY."

The perusal of this narrative excited my warmest interest in behalf of this unfortunate pair, which the simple name of "Mary," signed at the close, was very far from diminishing. Mary! Why, it was the name I had always loved. It was a name Byron had immortalized, Burns had worshipped, idolized by all poets, and rendered sacred by Divine History. I always thought if I ever married, it must be to some one named Mary!

"My first case" now presented every attribute of interest necessary to engage my feelings and stir my energies. That night was passed in preparation. Morning dawned, but yet no light broke in upon my dark defence. Majors was a doomed man, and I could not save him. The gong announced that dinner was waiting me; but I had neither time nor inclination to eat. The bell startled me—yes, the hour for court had arrived. It was the knell of departed hope. My case the first for trial. Hardly conscious of the act, and half-crazed by anxiety, I nervously snatched up the Constitution of the State, and commenced reading. Suddenly I caught a glimpse of hope. The State Attorney had made a blunder in taking the deposition, and should there be no other testimony against Majors, I would avail myself of his mistake, only when it was too late to be remedied.

With a fevered brain, and almost wild with excitement, I ascended to the Court-room, which was already crowded with spectators, all anxious for the punishment of my client, and expecting nothing but a subject of merriment in the feeble defence of the young lawyer. The trial proceeded without a word on my part until the deposition of Mrs. Majors was offered. I objected to its going to the jury, on the ground that the wife could not be a witness against her husband. This was merely a ruse to provoke a little sarcasm from the State Attorney, that I might be the more justified in answering him in the same style when the proper moment arrived.

"When the young lawyer has practiced law as many years as I have," said he, in his most sneering tone, "he will learn to make objections of this kind to a deposition before the jury is sworn."

A titter ran through the house, which seemed to say, "how green he is!"

The court decided that my objection came too late; but by way of consolation remarked that the wife was a competent witness against the husband where she was the injured party.

The State Attorney went on with his testimony, and as though afraid to speak lest I might be wrong, I sat in silence until the prosecutor had rested his case. As I had hoped, no evidence was adduced upon which to found a conviction beyond the deposition of Mrs. Majors. No one had seen or known about it except by hearsay, and relying solely upon this deposition, the prosecution had neglected to adduce any circumstantial evidence whatever.

When called to proceed with the defence, I rose and said:

"If the court please, I now move to strike the deposition of Mary Majors from this case, and as the ground for this motion, read from the constitution of the State of Iowa. In making provision for criminal prosecutions, it says: 'The accused shall have compulsory process to procure testimony, and shall be confronted with the witness!' In this case, your honor, the accused was lying in jail some six miles from where the deposition was taken. This provision, therefore, has been violated; the testimony is incompetent, and was illegally permitted to go to the jury."

"If the court please," replied the State Attorney, "this deposition was taken by agreement, and, therefore, I hope the court will not permit the gentleman to come in and stultify himself in this way. The precedent would be bad in practice, and serve to impair all confidence in professional agreement."

I contended, in reply, that I had waived no right of my client by my consent to take the deposition—that the terms of the agreement were that "all obections should be reserved for the decision of the court;" that I was not disposed to consult the convenience of the gentleman as to the proper time to make objections, and that I insisted upon my motion.

Every man in the house, save poor Majors, was indignant at the course I had taken. Even the court caught the excitement, and turning to me with a frown, said:

"I am compelled to sustain this motion, but it is with reluctance that I withdraw this deposition from the jury. More especially am I pained to see a young man, just starting in an honorable profession, and without flattery I may say with a fair prospect of success, thus lightly violate his word. No confidence can hereafter be placed in his professional agreement."

I sat in silence under this, as I considered, unmerited rebuke, nor faltered a moment in my determination to save my client even at the sacrifice of myself.

The State Attorney then asked for a continuance; but upon being informed by the court that he could not again put the prisoner on trial for the same offence, the case was submitted with short arguments, and after an absence of fifteen minutes, the jury returned a verdict of "Not Guilty!"

Here I might properly drop the veil and close this sketch; but I owe a duty to the reader who has had the patience to follow me thus far in my prosy style of narration.

For months after this trial I was slighted by the ladies, shunned by society, avoided by my friends, and pointed at as the lawyer whose rascality had saved from the Penitentiary the greatest brute that ever shamed humanity. But I bore it patiently, for I felt that within which assured me that I had done only my duty.

Mrs. Majors lingered until December, and died with a full assurance of life beyond the grave. Majors never tasted liquor after his trial, but his constitution sinking under disease, he died the following April, fully impressed with the belief that he should meet his Mary in Heaven, where their sorrows and sufferings would forever cease.

I immediately wrote to his father who sent over for the children and adopted them as his own. As I returned to them the history of their sainted mother, I felt that all this world's scorn could not weigh against the reflection that I had saved their father from the conviction of a felony.

And now, as I call up the past, memory loves to dwell upon this oasis in my desert life, and I at least feel no regret for the course I then pursued. But I will leave the reader to moralize and should but a single danger be avoided from a perusal of this sketch, I shall feel amply repaid for giving to the world a history of "My First Case."

IMPORTANT TO PROPERTY OWNERS!

Bridgewater Paint,

FOR WOOD, BRICK AND OTHER BUILDINGS, STEAMBOATS SHIPS, RAILROAD CARS, DEPOTS AND ALL OUT DOOR WORK, ALSO FOR ALL KINDS OF IRON WORK, ABOVE AND UNDER WATER.

☞ The attention of the public is respectfully called to the following testimonials in favor of the celebrated BRIDGEWATER PAINT. It is unnecessary for the Agents to more than add, that after EIGHT MONTHS use in the South, the character of the Paint is firmly established, and it is now offered to the public as the best FIRE AND WEATHER PROTECTOR EVER DISCOVERED.

CERTIFICATE OF JNO. F. MILLER, OF ATTAKAPAS

In July last I was induced to apply the Bridgewater Mineral Paint to my Sugar-house, and, in every respect, it has exceeded my expectations and the representations made by the Agents, Messrs. G. C. BOGERT & CO. I cheerfully add my testimony to the numerous ones embraced in the Agents' circular, and recommend the same to planters and others as the best FIRE AND WEATHER PROTECTOR I have ever known. Where I have applied it, it has been exposed to the sun since last July, and has neither blistered nor cracked, and has formed a solid metallic surface, which has proved entirely impervious.

(Signed) JOHN F. MILLER.

NewIberia, Attakapas, March 16, 1852.

CERTIFICATE OF CAPTAIN ST. CLAIR THOMASSON, OF STEAMER MAGNOLIA.

Having painted the hurricane deck of the passenger steamer MAGNOLIA, under my command, with the BRIDGEWATER PAINT, I cheerfully recommend it for its IMPERVIOUS qualities, and have no hesitation in pronouncing it SUPERIOR, in my judgment, to any mineral paint before the public, and believe it to be a CERTAIN PROTECTION AGAINST THE EFFECTS OF SPARKS AND CINDERS. It has also proved ENTIRELY WATERPROOF on my decks, after three months use.

(Signed,) ST. C. THOMASSON.

NewOrleans, December 3, 1851.

CERTIFICATE OF CAPTAIN WILLIAM BROWN, OF TOWBOAT PORPOISE.

I have used the BRIDGEWATER PAINT, for which Messrs. G. C. BOGERT & CO. are Agents, on the hurricane deck of the Towboat PORPOISE. The Paint has been on about three months, and SPARKS and CINDERS CONSTANTLY falling upon it has had NO EFFECT WHATEVER.

In about four weeks it became a PERFECT SLATE, and I am satisfied of its possessing all the qualities necessary to insure it a CERTAIN PROTECTION against the effects of SPARKS and CINDERS. I confidently recommend the BRIDGEWATER PAINT for the purpose set forth in the Agents' Circular.

(Signed) WM. BROWN, Captain of Towboat Porpoise.

NewOrleans, December 1, 1851.

CERTIFICATE OF THE MANAGERS AND AGENTS OF LOUISIANA DRY DOCK CO.

Having had the LOUISIANA DRY DOCK painted with the BRIDGEWATER PAINT, and its merits thoroughly tested, we fully concur in opinion with Captain Thomasson of the MAGNOLIA, and Captain Brown of the PORPOISE. We cheerfully recommend said PAINT as a SUPERIOR ARTICLE.

(Signed) HUGHES, VALLETT & THOMAS, Louisiana Dock Yard.
J. P. WHITNEY & CO., Agents Louisiana Dry Dock Co.

NewOrleans, February 4, 1852.

CERTIFICATE OF JOSEPH BENSON, PAINTER.

I have used the BRIDGEWATER PAINT, for the past five months on brick and plastered buildings, and on tin, shingle and canvas roof and in every instance it has given the fullest satisfaction.

From tests and experiments made under my immediate direction, I can testify to its being PROOF AGAINST THE EFFECTS OF SPARKS AND CINDERS, and a protection against leaks. I consider it far superior to any Mineral Paint I have ever seen, and invaluable for all outdoor purposes—possessing qualities that particularly recommend it for use in a Southern climate. JOSEPH BENSON, Painter,

New Orleans, February 6, 1852. 132 Camp street.

B. A. FAHNESTOCK'S VERMIFUGE.—Read the following testimony of its efficacy:—
TIONESTA, Venango county, Pa., May 29, 1851.
This is to certify that I have been using B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge in my family for the last ten years, and have always observed its good effects in expelling worms; unlike other kinds of Vermifuge which I have used, it does not leave a fever on the child, but expels the worms without any injurious effects following. About six months ago I gave one teaspoonful of it to my little girl, seven years old; after taking it she passed two hundred worms. I only mention this as one among many instances in which I have observed the good effects of the Vermifuge. JAMES G. DAWSON.

SAMUEL REYNOLDS cures CANCERS, SCALD HEAD, WHITE SWELLING, SORES and ULCERS of every description—121 Gravier street, NewOrleans.—From numerous testimonials we take the subjoined certificate of a well known respectable citizen, to the efficacy of my treatment:
NEW ORLEANS, October 6, 1852.
S. REYNOLDS, Esq.—Dear Sir: I beg to express to you my thanks and grateful acknowledgments for the great benefit I have received from your treatment, and to announce that my Two Cancers are perfectly eradicated, which has convinced me that your medicine and treatment are superior to any other practitioner's. I have endured extreme agony for the past thirty years, having [illegible] my acquaintance with you, and had sought relief from Dr. Gilbert in vain.
For six months Dr. Gilbert operated on me, and in his treatment gave me a fire taste of purgatory, for though he pronounced me cured, the Cancers returned in a much worse form in a few months afterwards. Despairing of relief, and meditating the amputation of my arm, I was induced to apply to you, although I had no hope of receiving relief, but only went as a last resource. My faith in Dr. Gilbert was such as to produce a belief that any one else could treat so virulent a case successfully; but I find that your treatment is mild and effective. I thank a kind Providence for directing me to your office, and trust that you may be the means of relieving numbers of the human family now suffering from Cancerous Disease, who only require to know your address to be as I am—cured by your medicine and treatment. Eighteen months having elapsed since you treated me, I am warranted in assuring you that I am perfectly cured. JOHN F. HOIT, Hatter,
