A BOOK equal to Charles O'Malley. Published this day.
THE BIVOUAC OR THE RIVAL SUITORS, by Col. W. H. Maxwell, author of "Hector O'Halloran," "Stories of Waterloo," "My Life, or the Adventures of Capt. Blake," &c., beautifully illustrated. Price Fifty cents.
This capital book is of the "Charles O'Malley" school; full of dashing adventures, love intrigues, brilliant sketches of battle scenes, in which the inspiring headlong charge and terrible defeat are detailed with all the force of truth. We have not the space, though we have a strong inclination, to give our readers a taste of its quality—to regret, at length, the droll dialogues at the regimental mess table; the eloquent description of the encampment of the rival armies; the fearful carnage of the battle-field; the prodigies of valor performed during the mountain combat; the richly humorous "confessions of a gentleman who would have married, if he could;" and a dozen other descriptions marked in every page by some bold fruit of wit or genius. The warlike descriptions will vie with the most animated scenes in Allison or Napier; and the humorous portions of the book have no peers but in the pages of Lever or Lover.
