REYNOLDS'S NEW WORK.—NOW READY—
THE MASSACRE OF GLENCOE.
A Historical Tale, with numerous Illustrations. Complete in one vol. Price 50 cents.
BY G. W. M. REYNOLDS.

This is an admirably-written story, possessing a most intricate and yet well-arranged plot. It relates to William of Orange's horrible, ruthless massacre of a whole clan of gallant Highlanders, whose only crime was their loyalty to King James, their lawful and beloved monarch. Men, women, and children, without distinction, were shot down, or perished by fire, or by exposure to the weather, to the number of thirty thousand. It is a thrilling tale, that cannot fail to interest while it instructs the reader, as it throws light on one of the most eventful epochs of Scotch history. Price 50 cents.

This work is a striking exposition of the so-called "Modern Spiritualism" in all its forms, from "rapping" up to "elevated entrancements." It is the most opportune work that has yet appeared on the subject. The author gives a graphic account of his visits to many private and public "spirit circles;" and, although oftentimes humorous in his descriptions, he reports with great minuteness and fidelity, all that he saw and heard, giving literally every word alleged to have been rapped, tipped or uttered by spirits, and leaving absurdities and contradictions to appear on the face of the alleged "manifestations" themselves. The connection between Demonology, Witchcraft and Modern Spiritualism, is clearly shown, and a history of ancient "rappers" given. The author also brings, with great force of argument, both science and philosophy to develop the fallacy of the whole of these alleged "spirit manifestations;" and places in striking contrast the sublime religion of Christ, and the low and pernicious religion of the rappers. It is a book, in fact, which cannot fail to command the approbation of all who are opposed to evil delusions. H. LONG & BROTHER,

HERBERT'S AMERICAN GAME IN ITS SEASONS.
AMERICAN GAME IN ITS SEASONS. By Henry William Herbert—author of "Field Sports," &c. 1 volume 12mo, with 12 superb engravings; $1 25.

"Next to eating the game itself, is the pleasure we derive from reading these charming sketches, which are a combination of a description of the "fish, flesh or fowl" peculiar to each month of the year. A sporting account of the killing and taking, a cook's account; a cook's recipe, and the gourmand's smack of the lips while eating." [Newark Daily Advertiser.

"The hunter, the shooter, and the fisher will here learn all about the game that walks the earth, the birds of the air, and the fishes of the sea, and so they and the student of natural history will be instructed and entertained in this volume." [Baltimore Patriot.

"It is written in an attractive style for the general reader, and will be found of especial interest to the devotees of field sports—hunting, gunning and fishing." [Rural New-Yorker.

"A book to make one's mouth water, by its capital descriptions of trout, canvas-backs and other luxuries; while it stirs the blood by its lively descriptions of hunting and fishing adventures." [The Times.

THE MASTER'S HOUSE;
A TALE OF
SOUTHERN LIFE.
BY LOGAN.
"I was always a friend of the White Man."
12mo., cloth, illustrated. Price $1 25.

"THE MASTER'S HOUSE" is emphatically a book for the times, and is made of unusual interest from the unexpected agitation of the Slavery question, as involved in the important political measures now before our National Councils, and vital to the interests of every American citizen. Unlike any work ever written treating of the South, the black race occupies the position assigned to it by the laws and customs of that portion of our Union, and not a line is penned or a word expressed to create a false sympathy by dwelling upon their degradation or helplessness, or by elevating them into a false position by ascribing sentiments and intellectualities they do not possess. The scenes and characters are Southern; the prominent actors—the white man the responsible person, "THE MASTER."

READ WHAT FOLLOWS:

"In this graphic story, we find intrinsic evidence of a personal familiarity with the details of southern society. It has all the freshness and glow of actual life—not got up for the purpose of making a book, nor founded on hearsay from others, but based on knowledge obtained from long residence on a southern soil.

"The scene of the story is laid on a Louisiana plantation. Graham Mildway, the leading character in the plot, is the son of a wealthy Carolinian planter, who comes to the North for a collegiate education—falls in love with the belle of the rural city in which the college is located, graduates with the thickest of blushing honors, is off for one or two years, and purchases an estate in Louisiana; when he returns to claim his promised bride, takes her in triumph to his southern home, and, as a large land-owner and planter, experiences the natural variety of life characteristic of a slaveholding and chivalrous population.

"As an illustration of the domestic institutions of the South—with Slavery, of course, as their pivot—it will be eagerly read at this time in all quarters of the country. In describing Slavery, the author indulges in a very slight degree in dogmatic reflections—he lets the facts tell their own story, make no parade of moralizing, and does not deal in philanthropy to give an additional zest to his sketches. If it were not for the touch-me-not sensitiveness which most of the friends of Slavery exhibit toward every discussion of the subject, there is no reason why the writer's glowing pictures should not be enjoyed the other side of Mason and Dixon's line as well as by the 'cold-blooded fanatics' of the North. At any rate, the slaveholder will find but little personal abuse in this volume; and if he made to wince occasionally under the 'hard facts' that are brought to his notice, it is no more than he is often obliged to do by his every-day experience of the original realities that are here daguerreotyped. Certainly, the writer presents many agreeable views of southern society, and is by no means indisposed to do justice to the origin side of southern character. The writer's forte is clearly description, not vituperation." [New-York Tribune.
