MISSION OF LILIUOKALANI.

Theory that the Ex-Queen Seeks Indemnity from Uncle Sam.

In its notice of the arrival of ex-Queen Liliuokalani at San Francisco, the Call has the following:

Though freely granting an interview, the late reigning Queen had little of importance to say.

Courteous and easy in manner, with evidences of refinement, Liliuokalani is suspicious of newspaper men, for which reason she gracefully declines to answer questions that might divulge her plans. A bitter experience has sharpened her wits and taught her great caution.

"I have scarcely formulated my plans yet," said the late Queen, "and I cannot even say whether I shall go East or to London. Matters may arise at any moment to change any plans I might make."

The chief topic of the distinguished Hawaiian woman's conversation was the voyage and the wonders of her native land. She speaks eloquently of Halemaumau's awful fires, tells of Pele's hair and of Kilauea's thundering billows of flame, but knows little of politics or of her own plans.

No public character more deftly parries the interviewer or more successfully distracts attention from the subject at hand, but in spite of her care the general purpose of the visit is known.

The ex Queen, so those closest to her say, comes to America for the purpose of having a long and detailed interview with President elect McKinley on matters pertaining to the Hawaiian people and the political affairs of the island.

The natives still look upon her as their leader, and while they abandon the idea of monarchy they will largely follow her advice on annexation and like questions.

There are many reasons why the ex-ruler of Hawaii expects courteous treatment and a sympathetic hearing from the coming ruler of the United States. David McKinley was a brother of the President elect. He loved Hawaii and the Hawaiians and was for many years the trusted consul general of little Hawaii, in this country.

He was the personal friend of Liliuokalani and her brother, King Kalakaua, and the adviser and trusted representative of King Kalakaua. It is for these reasons among others, that the ex Queen will call upon Major McKinley, having already received quite direct assurances that she will be given a thorough hearing.

"It is absolutely unknown," said Colonel Macfarlane last night, "what view Liliuokalani takes of the complicated question of annexation and the rumor that she will seek to hurt the cause of annexation is a mere guess."

That the distinguished visitor will not seek an audience with President Cleveland is as certain as that she will try to see Major McKinley. It is understood from authentic sources that Liliuokalani, while thankful to President Cleveland for what he first undertook in her behalf, is disgusted with the result.

It is said she believes he backed down in the Hawaiian question, being afraid to confront the current of public opinion.

It is almost certain that Liliuokalani will visit London before she returns to the sunny isles of the semi-tropic seas, and that while there she will confer with Princess Kaiulani and her father, Hon. A. S. Cleghorn.

This belief is current among well-informed royalists here, who believe that the ex Queen's coming has long been known to the elect few.

There are few so rash as to think that the Hawaiians are plotting another revolution, though thoughtful and well-informed people believe that the ex-Queen's coming to America has great political significance.

It is thought to mean, at least, that she comes as a special pleader and distinguished leader for those who are making an effort to gain more civil liberties in the islands. They demand a broader government than they have today. They do not seek to become hostile, yet they think they have too little to say today.

There were many callers on the ex Queen last night, among the first being Frederick Wundenberg, formerly a member of her

LEWIS & Co.

A man may be intemperate in his eating as in the consumption of liquor and experience just as unpleasant results unless the food supply is of a good character.

We aim to secure the best that is obtainable and our reputation has been constructed on the basis that we seldom make mistakes in the goods we buy.

For Christmas we ordered fifty proper trees from California; there are five left and unless you hurry you will not get the one you intend to buy. We made no mistake in buying trees; we believed the people would use them, and we were correct. Our orders for Evaporated Peaches, Apricots and Plums was a large one but the quality of the goods is such that we doubt if our stock will hold out until the arrival of the next invoice. You can make no mistake in buying these goods.

So it is with our other wares, they are the best quality and even if you are intemperate in their use you will experience no bad results. Another delicacy you may not have tried is the Eastern Bloater Mackerel. Soaked over night and broiled in the morning makes the most delicious breakfast dish imaginable. They are sold singly or by the barrel as you wish. A telephone message to 240 will bring what you want.
