GREAT BROADWAY FAILURE.—"THE SPIRIT OF SPECULATION" is one of those impulsive attributes which urges mankind onward, equally and often as rapidly to ruin as to fortune; hence the EXTRAORDINARY MUTATIONS OF COMMERCE.
The favored circulative channel of yesterday is abandoned today, and in a week the seductive spirit is pointing to a new field for enterprise, where the poor man may realize his dreams of wealth, and the rich man striving for more lose his all. On the one hand the ambitious artisan, whose once weekly portion merely supplied his family with life's requisites, becomes the wealthy prince; while on the other the rich merchant, whose power and wealth has shone Aladdin-like, is toppled from his high position, and necessitated, it may be, to ask assistance from his former dependent."
That the above quotation is no flame of Fancy's weaving, the last few years have furnished abundant proofs among this community; and hence are produced those circumstances which have terminated in the prostration of one of the MOST FAVORED HALLS OF COMMERCE WITH WHICH THIS METROPOLIS WAS ADORNED.
