[illegible] Night Robes.

[illegible] very in the masculine ward-[illegible] this time it is the night robe [illegible] been used as a medal for a [illegible] of night wear that has not [illegible] sleeves. While there is [illegible] garment in her trousseau [illegible] robe is not, there are [illegible], especially of limited [illegible] will refuse in the replica. [illegible] smart laundry bills, better serve [illegible] her health of mind and greater [illegible] The less embellished, ribbon [illegible] robe worthed robe, while a [illegible] to look at, is far from the [illegible].

[illegible] place it is always ready for [illegible] after the initial wash, and it is [illegible] of woman who can stand lace, [illegible] she has the time. Embroidery [illegible] little luster, and it only takes [illegible] of washes of this delicate but [illegible] to give a woman the reputation [illegible] a slatern. And then the [illegible] comfortable, and if too tight it [illegible] shoulders and keeps the occupant [illegible] struggle to free herself. [illegible] the masculine model, with [illegible] collar and cuffs, its roomy [illegible] back, the stout [illegible], and, best of all, the simple [illegible] of needle-stitched braid. Made [illegible] that comfort them "that [illegible] they are called, are only $1 [illegible] one will outlast three fancy [illegible] and inserted with Valenciennes or Hamburg embroidery, [illegible] quality of material is used, [illegible] half as much will it cost to [illegible].—New York Letter.

[illegible] Lady Stanley.

[illegible] days ago a "London correspondent" announced that Sir Richard [illegible] was "lying very dangerously ill, [illegible] and alone in a London lodging-[illegible] Stanley was being feted." [illegible] statement was absolutely untrue, [illegible] had the effect of drawing the [illegible] interesting letter from Lady [illegible] he is with Sir Richard at [illegible]

[illegible]hard will never be neglected [illegible] while I am alive. I have been [illegible] to him for nearly thirty years, [illegible] five years' engagement, and [illegible] those thirty-five years I have [illegible] absent from him one day that [illegible] to be with him—in other [illegible] never been absent except [illegible] orders. For the last seven [illegible] have hardly been a day apart, [illegible] the last three and a half years [illegible] has been ailing never one hour [illegible] of the twenty-four. During [illegible] three years and a half we have, in consequence of the weakness of his health, sacrificed everything to have a resident English doctor (who was looking for such a berth) living and traveling with us. And instead of a London lodging we have a beautiful and romantic home (with every comfort for him that our means allow) at the very head of the Adriatic. Next year his term of service expires (forty-nine years actual service), and then we shall both be, if alive, 'in a London lodging neglected and alone.' But to state that now is what the Americans would call 'a little previous.'"—Pall Mall Gazette.

A Widow's Generous Action.

It is learned that B. Quale, who died [illegible] Eau Claire a few weeks ago and left a [illegible], but no will, that when his estate [illegible] the value of $1,000,000 it should [illegible] used in erecting and maintaining in [illegible] a hospital for crippled, said a short time before his death that he then owned property which, if he could only live to dispose of it, would net him $1,100,000, but that if sold by others would probably not bring more than $900,000. Thus it seems that some years are likely to elapse before the cherished hope of the dead benefactor will be realized. Mr. Quale's wife voluntarily and with a perfect understanding signed the deed before the death of her husband, by which he conveyed all his property to three trustees for management in accordance with his known wishes, and it is given out that not only she but the other relatives are earnest in their intention to see that the desires of Quale are carried out.—Milwaukee (Wisconsin).

Mrs. Noble's Bark Table.

Mrs. Noble, wife of the secretary of the interior, has among other veritables [illegible] such as a miniature table cabinet of mahogany, which she uses for her spoon collection. The table is a low stand delicately constructed, with slender legs, the entire finish, ormolu trimmings and a polish like a mirror. Beneath the glass top is a velvet bed containing shallow depressions or compartments, in which, like jewels, repose the unlearned spoons to highly prized and greatly admired. One of the famous spoons was brought from Moscow and represents the Russian chalice spoon used in the Greek church by the priests at the communion service.—Washington Letter.

Exercise in Housework.

Housework is healthy, and many physicians recommend it to women who need exercise. Walking is not enough; it exercises only the legs, while dusting and sweeping bring an entirely different set of muscles into play. Many girls find more interest in their homes if encouraged to assist in the care of them. Household duties, if properly planned, need take but little time out of a long day. To be systematic in the discharge of such duties is the only way to properly accomplish the right amount of work.—New York Journal.

[illegible] Leslie and the Marquis de Leuville.

[illegible] will not say anything which may [illegible] the marquis pain. He blames me [illegible] his troubles, perhaps justly. Five years ago I promised to marry him, but it is impossible for me to do so now. Although he is handsome, accomplished and clever I shall never see him again. I am going to America to lecture, and shall never return to Europe until the marquis is either dead or married to someone else.

If I ever marry again I shall marry a journalist.—Interview with Mrs. Frank Leslie.

Mrs. Lucy Parsons, wife of the unhanged anarchist who died on the gallows, still lives in Chicago, in the vicinity of Milwaukee avenue and May [illegible]. She is very poor, and supports herself and children by teaching the [illegible] art. She hopes to [illegible] her husband's remains [illegible] the vacant lot [illegible] Chicago.

Bad Effects of Catarrh.

It has been the rule to consider nasal catarrh almost entirely a local disease, and one which has very little effect upon the general system. All this is being rapidly disproved, and it is being shown that if the nose is in an unhealthy state there is quite a long list of affections which may be induced in consequence. Hay fever has often been cured by applications to certain points in the nasal passages. Asthma, also, has yielded to the same treatment. It is a well known fact that when the victim of catarrh suffers from dyspepsia scarcely any improvement in the latter can be made, no matter what is done for it, until the former is on the gain.

Evidence is not wanting to show that severe functional disturbances of the lungs, and even of the heart, are sometimes induced by nasal trouble. Recently there was reported the case of a woman who had had epilepsy for several years, and although she had patiently sought relief no improvement took place until applications were made to her nose and its condition improved. Under that line of treatment entire recovery occurred. Very many other cases are on record which show that the relation between the nose and other parts of the system is very intimate, the connection being of course through the nerve system.—Hall's Journal of Health.

New Method of Covering Pulleys.

An important improvement has been made in the covering of pulleys, by which it is claimed 50 per cent. more power can be transmitted, and all slipping is reduced to an imperceptible factor. This system comprises the following points: It consists in the employment of a specially prepared leather covering for the pulley which is extremely soft and elastic and never glazes by the rubbing action of the belt, as is the case when ordinary leather is employed for this purpose.

It is applied to the pulley and held firmly to it for all time by means of a special cement, which is soft and never hardens, like ordinary cement or glue. No rivets of any kind are employed, but the leather covering is firmly attached to the iron of the pulley by the cement alone. Once attached the covering will stand for years and never loosen or come off except when naturally worn out, the length of time varying with the circumstances and work done. This system will be invaluable to those engaged in the transmission of power by means of belts in the operation of machinery of all kinds.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Faces and Character.

"I am beginning more and more to doubt the truth of the statement that our faces are living indexes to our characters," said an elderly gentleman, as he threw down the morning paper in which he had been reading an account of some peculiarly atrocious murder. "Here is a case," he went on, "in which a man proved guilty of the most fiendish murder has a face that is anything but that of a murderer's in appearance. I cannot even believe that this is an exception to the rule. In short, I do not believe that there is any rule on this subject; for when I see around me people who are living noble lives, with no distinguishing mark thereof in their countenances; when I see about me people who are deep in defilements, but upon whose visages there is absolutely no token thereof, I am forced to the unhappy conclusion that the human face is an enigma whose secrets none can solve with the positive assurance that comes either by rule or by experience. Character may, in a broad way, leave its refler on the human face, but it is my belief that a man may or may not have character, despite the beauty or blemish of his countenance. In other words, the one factor is in no wise the necessary complement of the other.

"What is the practical significance of what I have been saying? Do not be overzealous in defining the virtues or shortcomings of those about you. To know a man's character you must know the man. The ancients were accustomed to sum up all knowledge in the now trite phrase 'Know thyself.' On mature thought they found the realization of this assertion to be a mere poet's dream. No man can know himself absolutely. How then can he know his friend, whom he knows but imperfectly and at best through a distorted medium? The world is neither good nor bad. It is both together—just as a summer season approaches the fulfillment of the law by the blending of sunshine and shadow, sunlight and rain."—Detroit Free Press.

Four One Minutes, Rich the Next.

One minute with poverty staring him in the face; the next a rich man for life. That was the actual experience of S. P. Armstrong, who died of heart disease at Butler, Pa. He had invested all his funds in sinking a well in the Thorn Creek oil region of Pennsylvania. It was thought to be dry, and as a sort of farewell protest against his ill luck the explorer fired a torpedo in its depths. Immediately after its explosion the well began to flow at a tremendous rate, a volume of oil being lifted into the air to a height of at least one hundred feet. Not having expected a big well no connections had been made to the tanks, and the oil flowed on the ground, completely deluging the entire neighborhood. After several hours the oil was turned into tanks with great personal risk to the workmen, and the first day's production was 10,000 barrels, the largest well ever opened in the oil county. It was a mine of wealth to Mr. Armstrong, and developed a large scope of rich territory.—New York Press.

The Niagara River Canal.

The Niagara River canal is expected to cost $3,500,000 and furnish 119,000 horse power. With coal at $4 or $5 a ton, the cost of one horse power is placed at from $30 to $40 a year, or, roughly, ten tons of coal per year per horse power. This canal, if it gives the estimated horse power, will furnish a power about equal to 1,200,000 tons a year. This will cost, taking a capitalized value of four per cent, on the investment, $140,000 as the first outlay, and at least as much more for maintenance and repairs. The horse power will therefore be about as cheap as coal at twenty cents a ton, and it appears capable of almost indefinite expansion unless the falls are considered of more value than horse power.—New York Telegram.

Anna Katharine Green (Mrs. Rohlfs) is now in Europe. She received $6,000 for her last novel, "The Forsaken Inn," from Robert Bonner's Sons, and $10,000 for another story which they hold in reserve. The stories were written within six months' time.

The little granddaughter of Maj. Knox-Holmes, of London, who is well known in the tricycling world, is already distinguishing herself in the same pastime. She is only 7, but she already owns a safety, and on that and the tandem with the major she has ridden over 300 miles since the 1st of January.

Among those who attended Mr. Stanley's wedding reception on Saturday was a wealthy widow named Hotchard. While there she stole several silver spoons from the room in which the wedding gifts were displayed. She was seen by a detective who was on duty in the room and was arrested.

Miss M. M. Eager, of Newburg, N. Y., who managed the Kirmess in Syracuse for the Women's Educational and Industrial union, cleared $3,000 from the dance. This will be applied to the support of the kindergarten and industrial school work, in which the union is interested.

Another woman who has made her mark as a lawyer is Mrs. Ada Bittenbender, of Osceola, Neb. She has tried many cases before the supreme court of Nebraska and has not lost one. Mary L. McGindly, of Detroit, was also admitted recently to practice law.
