TRIES TO SPEND $12,000 AND WORRIES THE POLICE

[By Latest Mail]

TRENTON.—Although he still had in his possession the greater part of a legacy of $12,000, Daniel Mullen, a well-known Trenton young man, narrowly escaped a six months' sentence of hard labor at the Mercer county workhouse, where stonebreaking is the chief occupation.

Mullen, it is charged, tried to drink up the entire legacy, which had been left him by his parents, and in so doing annoyed the police.

Magistrate Naar was about to impose the workhouse sentence after his arrest for making too much noise in the public streets when the prisoner's brother pleaded for his release, promising that Daniel would spend his money hereafter with less ostentation. He was [illegible]
