MILLER NOT GUILTY.

Yesterday afternoon in the federal court the jury that tried the Cyrus C. Miller case found the accused not guilty after being out only five minutes. The five minutes would not have been necessary, only for the fact that some time had to be spent in opening and shutting the door of the jury room. There was not a doubt in anyone's mind as to what the verdict would be, as all the listeners in the court could see that no case of blind-pigging was made out. The jury was made up as follows: George T. Kluegel (foreman), James Carlisle, John Schleif, Seeley I. Shaw, Charles F. Murray, William M. Graham, R. W. Atkinson, B. Tarpley, Charles S. Hall, Charles P. Osborne, Robert Fox Clarke and Henry Wramp.

Lee B. Wolf of the stock brokerage firm of Hahn, Wolf & Co., was suspended for insolvency by the Philadelphia stock exchange.

AFRICAN LURE STRONG WITH DAN CRAWFORD

Famous English Mission Worker Is Heard By Men's League of Central Union Church

That Dan Crawford, the famous English mission worker now visiting in Honolulu, must be heard to be appreciated, is the opinion of those who listened to the address which he delivered at the meeting of the Men's League in Central Union church last night. No report can hope to reproduce his charm of manner, his dramatic presentation, the spell of his broad Scotch accent, the merry twinkle in his eye. To understand his perfect naturalness, his frank directness and his absolutely unstudied style, one must hear him.

In introducing Mr. Crawford Mr. Carter stated in part as follows:

"It is said of our guest of honor this evening that a short time ago he was unknown, nobody had heard of him; suddenly he burst out from the heart of Africa, swept through Great Britain and crossed the United States in a manner such as no other man has ever equalled. You all know the story of the old woman who said 'I've heard the gospel preached all my life long, now what I want is to see a little of it before I die.' Had that old woman been present here tonight, she like you and I would have the opportunity of seeing the living embodiment of the gospel. Think of it! Twenty-two years in the long grass, one thousand miles from the nearest post of civilization, lost in the dimmest recesses of the darkest continent. And yet while hunting human souls, our guest has found and seen with his own eyes that which Livingston sought in vain, the source of Egypt's lifegiving Nile.

"Our guest, like Cecil Rhodes, has found great wealth in Africa, not that of gold and ivory but the riches of human life and human souls. Those savages told him that 'God must be angry because of his silence,' and therefore our guest is on his way back to them to take them His gospel and to break that silence. It is indeed a rare privilege to introduce to you Mr. Dan Crawford."

Mr. Crawford spoke, in part, as follows:

"I am glad I am going back to Africa; glad I was shut up for more than twenty-two years, and glad I took it, as you might say, 'head-on,' being shut off from all supplies. The longest wait I had for a letter was two years and nine months. I was shut away from those cemeteries of dead books called libraries—out on the lonely frontier of the world, hearing the voice of God. I am so sorry that you are beginning to lose the best voice of eternity that the soul of man has ever heard.

"Will you look at this blank sheet of paper. Please imagine it to be a map of Africa. Half it in two. Now half it in two the other way and there, in the very middle of the middle is my postal address. I was right down there. Oh, it's a great life, and a grand life! To give the native a chance; to go into a hostile camp armed only with a walking stick. Yes, you have a gun, but you have it in the same sense that you have umbrellas here. You keep your gun out of sight when you go into an enemy's town. You say 'Here I am. If there's going to be any unpleasantness let's have it now.' And you find the cannibal a great, good-hearted pal, who will do his best to give you a good time.

"I want to tell you a little about them. I never arranged a lecture in my life, but I did want to tell you something about these people. The further I penetrated into the far interior, the darker the day, until I found a veritable cannibal tribe — weeping the same old heart-broken tears, smiling the same old smiles, yes, even punning the same old puns! Yes, let me tell you about one pun I heard. One chief was making a collection of bones—you can imagine the variety!—and another in speaking of it said, 'Yes, he has a large collection; but why make any bones about that!'

"By the by, I was astounded to find the cannibals tip-top gentlemen, armed to their finger tips with finish and finess, excruciatingly polite. You can't speak to him standing, you must first be seated. You have to triangulate your remarks to him through a third person. You can't speak direct, nor can he answer direct. Therefore you get two hearings. Mind you, they are tremendously polite. If a native king brings you a box of this light temperance beer for your men who are working in the field he will say in a disparaging offhand way, 'I have brought you some bottles of water.' They do not like to deny a request so they soften the denial with the formula: 'I am not refusing.' They never say bluntly, 'Are you quite well?' and in their custom they beat the Frenchman who asks you, 'Is Mr. Smith quite well?' putting the question in the third person. They say, 'Are all the Mr. Smiths—twenty thousand Mr. Smiths—quite well?' They have thirty-two tenses to their verbs, twelve vocal voices, Mr. Grammarian, and nineteen genders to their nouns. In speaking to Mrs. Pankhurst (She is quite a pal of mine) about these nineteen genders I said 'Obviously in Africa there is room for the suffragette.'

"Yes, the cannibal is a tip-top gentleman. There is some objection hanging in your grains I see. Can you bear the thought that the cannibal of Africa says he eats man because man alone is good for what he needs? No cannibal ever, ever, ever, by any chance would dare to eat a chicken, the village scavenger. Never, never, never! In my travels into Mexico I heard that seven hundred were lying dead in the camp of one leader and 500 in the camp of another. I can fancy a cannibal saying 'What then, is this the venomous hatred of the snake? Thou killest and thou eatest not what thou killest?'

"'Thinking Black'—this means getting in the back of the black man's brain, which means living with the native as I did and finding him a great, good pal."
