NATIONAL REPUBLICAN.

THE OLD FLAG.

Up with the Old Flag! Let it flutter
To the free winds of Heav'n forever;
Though rebels and traitors may mutter,
And threaten its folds to dissever.

They say 'tis no longer the symbol
Of Union and freedom and truth—
That it makes not its foes now to tremble
As when in the strength of its youth.

But its foes shall be liars before it,
And rebels and traitors shall quail;
For the sires whose stout arms once bore it
Bequeath'd it to sons who'll not fail:

Who swear, by the mom'ries that cluster
Around every star of its field,
No stain shall o'er tarnish its lustre
While an arm lives its glory to shield.

They swear, by their lives, to restore it
To all the renown of the past;
And that triumphs shall yet gather o'er it,
Growing bright, and more bright, to the last.

Then float, gallant Old Flag, forever!
Wave proudly o'er land and o'er sea!
And palsied the arm that would sever
One bright star or one stripe from thee!

FROM FORTRESS MONROE.

Arrival of our Wounded and of Rebel Prisoners.

More About the Fight of Tuesday.

Reported Fighting on Wednesday Morning.

FORTRESS MONROE, July 3.—At ten o'clock this morning, the Nellie Baker arrived at Fortress Monroe from Harrison's Landing, she having left there at five o'clock this morning She brings down twenty-five rebel prisoners, and has only a few wounded on board.

The most terrible fighting took place on Tuesday last, and with the most brilliant success. The rebels were defeated in every action, and the rebel officers taken prisoners admit the loss of at least ten thousand men on that day. Our artillery was most successfully brought to bear nearly all day, while the rebels did very little execution with theirs. Our loss was very small when compared with that of the rebels. The fighting on both sides was of the most desperate character. As fast as the rebel forces were cut to pieces other fresh troops were immediately marched forward to fill their places. They appear to disregard the lives of their men, and place and hold them under the hottest fire of our artillery, which was sweeping them down and cutting them to pieces as fast as they arrived.

The enemy have been repulsed and driven back in every fight for the last three days—Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday. Yesterday the enemy advanced about eight o'clock in the morning and opened fire, which was instantly returned, and severe fighting on both sides was kept up for three hours, when the enemy retreated with considerable loss and badly cut up by our artillery. This was the last fighting Our troops are in fine spirits, and never were so anxious to fight as they are now.

Most of our wounded express a desire to recover speedily, that they can again return to their regiments. All seem to be very anxious to be present when Richmond is taken.

A soldier arrived here to-day, who was wounded on Tuesday by a Minie rifle ball in his left shoulder, which struck the bone, splitting and battering the ball There were so many poor soldiers about him who were worse off than himself, that he crept out of the way, and with his pocket knife dug out the ball himself. He said if he had waited his turn for surgical attention it would have taken him longer to recover, and he was anxious to return to his regiment, or "boys," as he termed it.

The steamer John Brooks, from Harrison's Landing, with 400 wounded soldiers on board, arrived at Fortress Monroe at eleven o'clock this morning. Their wounds are being dressed to-day, and this evening the steamer leaves with them for Annapolis. It is impossible to obtain their names. Many of them are officers

The Vanderbilt and Arrowsmith have arrived this evening, and are too late for me to get any account of their numbers, but judge both boats contain 700 wounded.

The Vanderbilt has 700 wounded, the Elm City probably 300, the Arrowsmith 300, and the John Brooks 400.

The Vanderbilt and Arrowsmith go from here to-night for New York, and the John Brooks to Annapolis.

Arrival of Rebel Prisoners—The Rebels Driven Back Ten Miles.

FORTRESS MONROE, July 4.—The steamer State of Maine, with 309 wounded soldiers on board, and the Kennebec with 250, leave Fortress Monroe this morning for New York. They arrived here last night from Harrison's Landing Many of them are very slightly wounded—a finger, a hand, or an arm. While endeavoring to obtain their names the boats were ordered to leave. Colonels C. E Pratt and A W. Lewis, Captains J. G. Wilson, John Knobloch, A. H Hamilton, and Daniel Parker, are on the State of Maine.

The Eleventh regiment Pennsylvania Reserves were in the first battle of the extreme right wing and suffered severely. Colonel Gallagher was wounded and taken prisoner; Lieutenant Colonel Jackson was killed; Major Johns is missing; Adjutant McCoy is missing, and Captain Brady was killed. All the other officers are missing except Captain Porter and his two lieutenants, who were detailed upon other business at the time of the engagement.

The steamer Commodore, from Harrison's Landing, brings down 476 soldiers, mostly wounded; among them is Wm. Raymond Lee of the Twentieth Massachusetts, who is quite disabilitated, but not materially injured.

Gen McClellan sent down 533 rebel prisoners to day, who were marched in Fortress Monroe single file, and a more unique spectacle never could be dreamed of. They wore all sorts of dress—many of which had undoubtedly been taken from our soldiers—no two were alike, and they were dirty, dingy, and worn out The rear was brought up by about twenty "contrabands," who, as they stepped ashore, grinned ghastly grins, and followed their "massas" into the fort. The prisoners were sent here in charge of Lieut. C. D Mehaffey, of the staff of Gen. Andrew Porter, provost marshal of the army of the Potomac Among them are fifty three officers—two colonels, three lieutenant colonels, and three majors. The following are included in the number: Major John Link, Seventh Louisiana; Captain Cornelius Page, Seventh Louisiana; Surgeon Norton, Eighth South Carolina; Captain J. W. Rogers, First South Carolina Rifles; Captain Kirby, Seventeenth Virginia; Captain Grantlery, First Virginia; Captain John R Towers, First Virginia; Augustus Shaw, adjutant Thirtieth Georgia; Colonel R. R. Applewhite, Twelfth Mississippi; Captain S D. McCheseney, Twelfth Mississippi; Colonel Edward Pendleton, Third Louisiana; Chaplain Martin, Third Louisiana; Captain Jonathan Rivers, Third Louisiana; Captain A. N. Jones, Seventeenth Virginia; Colonel Marum Mason, Seventeenth Virginia; Captain Robert Simpson, Seventeenth Virginia.

It is stated that the rebels were driven back and retreated ten miles on Tuesday, with great loss of men and cannon.

The Fourth was celebrated by the firing of a salute from the fort and navy at 12 o'clock, and an English frigate lying in the Roads abreast the fort chimed in its salute.

Reign of Terror in Arkansas.

DESOLATION EVERYWHERE.

Twelve Thousand Bales of Cotton Destroyed.

Correspondence of the St. Louis Republican.

MEMPHIS, June 30, 1862.

When about twenty miles above the mouth of White river, we saw a boat lying in the middle of the stream with several persons on board. On coming on board the St. Louis, it appeared that they were two wealthy citizens of Napoleon fleeing from conscription. One had his sister along with him. They had paid the two men who had rowed them thus far $100, and had slept at night upon the sandbars. They had been nearly a week making the distance of forty miles! Such is life in rebeldom.

One of these gentlemen informed me that Napoleon had been partially abandoned, not more than half its dwellings being inhabited.

Fully 12,000 bales of cotton have been burnt within a radius of 12 miles of Napoleon, and very little remains. Up the Arkansas the destruction has been general. The telegraph from Little Rock to Napoleon has been severed, the terminus now being at Red Fork, thirty-two miles up the river. Provisions are scarce, and the poorer people, long out of employment, are suffering.

Since we left the mouth of White river, Capt. McGunnegle has taken on board about twenty refugees from conscription, among them a Sandusky Indian and his family. We might have filled the boat with negroes, but Capt. McG. refused to take one on board.

The rebels of Arkansas seem to have lost all faith in Beauregard. They say Price is a better general than any in the rebel army. Yet they do not like the idea of fighting in a great army; discipline is irksome to their backwoods natures, and labor and fatigue still more intolerable. They say they will continue the war in their own style of bushwacking, and be responsible for the ultimate independence of their State.

At Helena, last week, Mr. John Parker was arrested and kept in jail three days for the crime of speaking to a Union officer on the White Cloud!

I have authentic information of the hanging of several Union men at Little Rock. One of the victims has two sons in the rebel army, and yet that fact weighed nothing in mitigating his fate.

FROM SOUTH CAROLINA.

Evacuation of James Island.

Correspondence of the Baltimore American.

GRIMBALL'S PLANTATION,
JAMES ISLAND, S. C, June 30, 1862.

This morning the steamers Ben Deford, Cosmopolitan, and Delaware, having each schooners in tow laden with the men, horses and baggage of the First Massachusetts cavalry, left this point for Hilton Head. All the cavalry ordnance, sick and wounded, will be transported first, and the infantry will follow. General Wright's division will go to Edisto Island, and General Stevens' to Hilton Head or Beaufort, South Carolina.

Three days ago the rebels threw some shells into our entrenchments, killing one man and wounding two others belonging to the Seventy-ninth New York. Ever since the battle of Stono the Federal forces have been busily engaged in erecting batteries for heavy guns, and in a few days they would be enabled to hold James Island against all the troops the Southern Confederacy could bring; but the orders for evacuation have been given, and they must be obeyed accordingly, although the troops, I feel satisfied, would prefer to remain here and give the rebels another fight. From what I can learn, the whole plan of landing the troops on James Island, and making an advance on Charleston from that point, had been debated upon in council, by Gen. Sherman, whilst he was in command here, but it was deemed impracticable.

General Benham thought he could immortalize himself by disobeying orders, and accordingly has fallen into disgrace. The picket have ceased firing at one another. From the signal station, in the top of a lofty tree, near General Stevens' quarters, the officer can gaze at the city of Charleston in the distance, while Fort Sumter stands in bold relief. Steamers can be seen plying around the harbor, laden with troops, and the enemy's camp with tents for 30,000 men are plainly visible. With the naked eye negroes can be seen busily engaged in erecting entrenchments. The weather continues warm, though the nights are cool. The troops are in tolerably good health.

From East Tennessee

From the Cincinnati Gazette, July 2.

We received important information, last evening, direct from East Tennessee, by way of Cumberland Gap. A gentleman had arrived from Knoxville at the latter place, who communicated with the military authorities, and his reports have been communicated to Gov Johnson by the hands of a special messenger, who passed through this city yesterday, en route for Nashville. The persecution of the Union men continued. The property of all loyal Tennesseans in the Union army was being sold at auction, including furniture, agricultural implements, &c., no attention being paid to the necessities of their families. A distinguished citizen of Tennessee, who had been arrested and cast into a Southern jail, had died there from the effects of unwholesome food, and his remains had arrived at Knoxville for interment.

Our informant says Union soldiers who are prisoners at the South are dying rapidly in consequence of the tainted meat and rotten food which they are compelled to eat.

Nearly all the rebel troops have been withdrawn from East Tennessee and taken to Richmond. The country, however, is filled with guerilla bands, who are committing all sorts of depredations on Union people.
