Brokers Believe That the Peoria Distilleries' Withdrawal Was Done to Influence the Market.

NEW YORK, May 22.—Money on call has been easy, ranging from 2 to 2½ per cent, last loan at 2½ per cent, and closing 2½ per cent.

Posted rates, $4.85½@4.90.

Government bonds steady.

Distillers furnished the only sensation of the day at the stock exchange. At the opening a sharp attack was made, on which the stock broke 4½@13, under a perfect avalanche of offerings. The drop was of course due to the announcement that five distilleries had withdrawn from the trust, ostensibly because of non payment of rental for premises on which they are operated. Subsequently it was mooted around that the move had been made chiefly for speculative effect, some of the insiders being credited with being heavily short. Be this as it may, certain men here gave the stock support and a rally to 16¾ ensued. The general list yielded ¼@1 per cent in the early dealings. The comparatively slight effect of the break in whisky on the general list occasioned no little surprise and some of the traders showed a disposition to cover. Sales were 108,809 shares, of which 24,580 were unlisted.

Chicago Markets.

CHICAGO, May 22.—There was a stronger tone in the wheat market this morning and there was an early advance of ⅛c, but it was hard to hold. All the early advance was lost and the market closed ⅛c lower.

The corn market was quite irregular over a half cent range during the forenoon. July opened at 41⅛c, or ⅛c below its closing prices on Saturday. It declined to 41c and then picked up gradually with many intermediate declines until it had risen to 41⅞c. It closed ⅛@⅜c higher. Oats were moderately active and strong on very light offerings.

The only conspicuous feature of the provision trade was its dullness. On the extreme dullness pork closed 27½@35c lower; lard 12½c and ribs 5c lower.

Closing prices:

WHEAT—May, 71⅞c; July, 73⅞c; September, 76⅝@76¾c; December, 71⅞c.

CORN—May, 41⅛c; July, 41⅝c; September, 42⅛c.

Corn—No. 2, cash, 41c asked.

Oats—No. 2 white, 38½c.

London Grain.

LONDON, May 22.—The grain markets opened this morning easier. At Liverpool wheat was rather easier, red winter ⅛d lower; corn ⅛d lower, and in more demand at the decline; flour 6d lower. London cargoes of California wheat unchanged; floating cargoes of wheat very dull. Wheat and corn on passage easier. At Mark Lane wheat was very slow; corn weaker. The French markets were quiet. The imports of wheat into Liverpool the past three days were 168,000 bushels, including 112,000 bushels of American.

LOCAL MARKETS.

There is no change to note in the grain, flour and feed market since last quotations, wheat being held at 66 cents per bushel and market firm. Corn and oats are in good demand, with steady sales at quoted prices. Rye holds its own at 50 cents per bushel, with little offering. The hay market is notably dull with little offering, but prices remain firm. The leather market remains quiet with moderate sales. Green calf skins are quoted at 5 cents for No. 1 and No. 2, 4 cents. Cured calf, No. 1, 7 cents; No. 2, 4 cents. New spinach brings 60 cents per bushel, old, 30@35 cents. Meats, fish and fruits have steady sales with no change in former prices. Frogs' legs are quoted at 6@6½ cents per dozen, according to size and quality. We quote.

Miss Huntington's First Opera Part.

Miss Agnes Huntington tells a very interesting story of her first appearance in opera. "It happened in New Haven some six years ago," said Miss Huntington. "The opera was 'Geraldga,' and I sang the role of the holy duchess. The first words of my song were 'Oh, holy vow.' The ladies of the chorus and I were supposed to be on a visit to the shrine and slowly wended our way down a steep mountain side. Arrived at the shrine the chorus knelt, and the closing lines of their song was my entrance cue. I stood upon a platform fully 10 feet high waiting until the song closed, and you can imagine I was frightfully nervous. While I was waiting here the comedian addressed me, informing me that the stage manager of the theater had been killed one year before at exactly the spot on which I was standing, the platform having given way.

"This was rather a cheerful piece of information to give to a person who was ready to drop from fright, but I nerved myself for the effort and sang my song well enough to receive an encore, although I don't think I could have stood up had I not supported myself on a staff I carried. I used very little makeup in this scene, and the conductor of the orchestra told me afterward that I looked like a ghost from the front, one of the results of that comedian's brilliant speech."—New York World.

Ferocious Wild Dogs.

The general belief of the wild dog tribes of India is borne out by two stories told by Colonel Baldwin of their attacking the bear and the tiger which put the fact beyond doubt. A bear was found by an English officer standing at bay before the dogs. He had killed one, but his hide and body were torn in strips by the bites of the pack. In the other the fresh bones of a tiger were found from which the flesh had been eaten. One paw still remained whole, and close by lay the freshly killed bodies of three wild dogs which had fallen in the fight.

Remembering not only the strength and activity of the tiger but the astonishing pluck with which, even when wounded, it will constantly charge a line of elephants and endeavor to scale the howdah—which is, in fact, a fort with an armed garrison—it is difficult to overestimate the courage of the wild dogs in meeting and destroying such an antagonist. We think it extremely probable that future observations of the courage of the wild dog may justify a statement once made, perhaps without sufficient evidence, that they have an inherent hostility to a larger feline, and are incessantly on the watch to destroy their whelps, so that the species are the instrument by which nature keeps down the superabundant felines of the wilderness.—London Spectator.

Is Life Worth Living?

When the poet came into the editor's room, he was looking so discouraged and disconsolate that the editor was constrained to notice it.

"Hello!" he said. "What's wrong? Anything happened?"

"No," replied the poet, tossing back his mane, "but I'm in despair—utterly hopeless. Life is a delusion, and I have wasted my existence in the struggle for the unattainable."

The editor gave a sigh of relief.

"That's nothing," he said. "You are no worse off than I am."

"Have you been struggling as I have been?" asked the poet, his face brightening.

"No, I haven't, but I might as well. I've been struggling for the attainable and haven't got it. Now, which of us is worse off?"

"Huh," growled the millionaire, who had overheard the conversation, "I've been struggling all my life for the attainable and have got it. How much better off am I than either of you?"—Detroit Free Press.

How the Moslems Pray.

The true Mohammedan is enjoined to prayer five times a day—namely, first in the morning before sunrise, at noon, in the afternoon before sunset, in the evening between sunset and dark, and between twilight and the first watch, being the vesper prayer. A sixth prayer is volunteered by many between the first watch of the night and the dawn of day. These prayers are simply repetitions of the laudatory ejaculation, "God is great!" "God is powerful!" "God is all powerful!" and are counted by the scrupulous on a string of beads. They may be performed at the mosque or any clean place.

During prayer the eyes are turned to the Kebla or point of the heavens in the direction of Mecca, which is indicated in every mosque by a niche called Mehrab, and externally by the position of minarets and doors. Even the posture during prayer is prescribed. The most solemn adoration is bowing the forehead to the ground. Women are to fold their hands on their bosoms and not to make such profound obeisance as the men. They are to pray gently and not to accompany the men to the mosque. In addressing God worshipers are to be humble, putting aside jewels and costly apparel.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Women Who Want to Act.

"All sorts of people want to go on the stage," said the manager of a dramatic agency the other day. "Applicants come from every walk in life. The lady in society and the woman who sells pins and needles behind the counter think they are born to be actresses. They waste their time trying to get into the profession, but not until too late do they realize that their vocation is not the stage and that they are then unfit for anything else. The reason is, I fancy, that many women are simply crazy for novelty, excitement and dress. They cannot resist the opportunities which the stage offers for satisfying their craving, and if they can do nothing better will go on as ballet girls.

"A great many people come in here every day who are to write a symphony, but they linger around the agencies and pick up odd jobs now and then. A manager perhaps cannot afford to pay the salary an experienced actress would demand, and for some performances is willing to accept the services of an amateur. Three women apply for position to one man."—Music and Drama.

Modern Turkish Women.

At the present time the veil used by Turkish ladies is no longer what it was. Its transparency admits of a pretty face being easily outlined. When the yashmack is very thick, one may conclude that the face it hides is not very seductive. In spite of the progress of civilization and the consequent transformation of habits and customs in many countries, the position of women in Turkey has only slightly changed. It is only in exceptional cases that those belonging to the higher classes are unaccompanied out of doors by eunuchs. These are the cadines, who have adopted and follow the Paris and London fashions.—Pall Mall Budget.

The Art of Politeness.

Is politeness quite a lost art? Sometimes I am obliged to think so. The other evening at a performance of "Adonis" a stylishly dressed woman sat behind a young girl whose large hat somewhat obscured her view of the performance. A polite request on her part would doubtless have induced the wearer of the obnoxious hat to remove it. But the woman who couldn't see preferred other methods. So loudly and rudely she said: "I think it is abominable for any one to wear a big hat like that in the theater. It oughtn't to be allowed."

The wearer of the hat immediately removed it. Then the woman who couldn't see leaned forward and said in the most dulcet of tones: "It was very sweet of you to remove your hat. It quite obscured the stage from view." But the sweetness had come a little too late, and the wearer of the hat replied quietly, but cuttingly, "It would have been more amiable of you, madame, had you asked me to remove my hat instead of making the disagreeable remark that met my ears."—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Waited on the Queen For Forty Years.

From England comes an item which may interest those who are curious about court customs. The dowager Duchess of Athole, who has been a lady in waiting to the queen for nearly 40 years and who was mistress of the robes in Lord Derby's first administration, was acting mistress of the robes during the months of February, March and April. The duties of the office will be undertaken by the dowager Duchess of Roxburghe during May, June and July. The mistress of the robes attends the queen at all court and state functions and is expected to be present at the drawing rooms, the state balls and the state concerts. The dowager Duchess of Roxburghe has been a lady in waiting on the queen for more than 30 years, and in length of service she comes second only to the dowager Duchess of Athole, the third place being filled by the dowager Lady Churchill.
