From the New York Commercial Gazette.

J. C. Colt, the Murderer.

We regret beyond measure to learn that his counsel in this city are making superhuman efforts to get evidence to prove that this man was insane when he committed the horrid murder with which he stands charged. Now in relation to this plea of insanity, which is uniformly urged in favor of every savage murderer who has no manner of excuse for committing his crime, we confess we have hardly the temper or patience to write coolly as we ought. It is one of the most wonderful facts of the age we live in, that jury after jury, and whole communities, can with the most perfect ease be gulled and bamboozled into the belief that every murderer who has nothing else to plead, must of course be insane.

What has the murderer to fear, always provided that he have money or friends? He will first plead not guilty and put the prosecution to proving his guilt. This may be a difficult work. But suppose, after incredible labor, and skill, that the proof is complete, and the criminal is guilty beyond a doubt. The prisoner's counsel then get up, and have nothing to do but with imperturbable sang froid simply urge that the criminal was insane when he did the murder. And pray what can be said in reply? Why nothing, of course. The thing is perfectly self evident. He must have been insane. Are not all murderers, whose guilt is perfectly proved, insane? Of course they are. Then equally, of course, the murderer in this present case must have been insane. That any man should commit a murder, with malice aforethought, and deserve to be hung, is altogether impossible, unless, yes, unless ☞ he chance to be a poor man without friends to prove him insane, as Russell was.

If this defence be set up in the case of J. C. Colt, and he should be cleared, as Philadelphia Wood was, on that ground, we are almost prepared to vote for lynch law at once, and ask the people to take the murderer into their own hands, and execute upon him that justice which it is impossible to obtain from the law.

Insanity forsooth! If you owe a man a mortal grudge, you have only to act like a fool for a few weeks or months, and give your friends to understand that you are insane, and then go and do the murder without the slightest fear of conviction. No jury would ever be allowed to suppose for a moment but that all was right, and that it was a plain case of in-san i-ty.

"I hate to hear people talk behind one's back," as the robber said when the constable was chasing him, and crying "stop thief!"
