Foreign Experts Praise Northwestern Plant

Model Brewery of America, Located in the Great Golden Grain Belt, Where Best Barley on Earth is Grown.

THE GREAT NORTHWEST has come into its own, not only its large crops of the present year, but in one of the big results of the work of the famers of this section.

It is a known fact that good beer can only be made with barley. Fair beer that will pass in some families, is made with other grains, but for the real malt product, such as physicians recommend, the best of barley must be used for making the malt. Nor does extra fine beer-making depend upon foreign hops, for right in the great far northwest are grown the finest hops for many purposes in the world, especially for medicine where tonics are needed.

It was natural, therefore, that by the help of the farmers, it should come to pass that the northwest should become famous for an exceptional quality and flavor of old aged beer, and that credit has been given to Golden Grain Belt Beers by no less critics than experts from the home of beer, the lands of Germany and Austria.

While much of this was due to the superior quality of the barley for which northwestern farmers secured and do secure, prices far in advance of wheat, it was necessary to perfect a model brewery in order to give a fair test to the home grown barley of the Golden Grain Belt. That test has been made, and the result is a widening demand for the Golden Grain Belt Beers, made from the products of the northwestern fields. And so great is the increase that the Minneapolis Brewing company asks the farmers of the northwest to grow more barley in order that there may be a plentiful supply. Many farmers are taking advantage of the help of the state farms and are selecting the finer varieties in order that they may get still more fancy prices than they have been securing. The foxy farmer, these days, is the one who turns his fancy away from wheat as an entire crop, and puts in a goodly acreage of barley. He sees the difference in the steady high price of the brewer's grain.

The Minneapolis Brewing Company has done more than its share in creating these high prices for northwestern barley. Many American brewers have made fun of its management because of the lavish way in which it has equipped the brewery at Minneapolis with every modern fanciful device for the making of pure aged beer. You must remember that there is a vast difference in beer. Old beer, properly lagered, is an assistant to health and digestion. Cheap, newly made beer is just the opposite and will give heartburn and sour stomach because it ferments in the stomach. Aged beer costs more to make because there must be immense storage capacity, perfectly sterile, and cooled to a fraction of a degree for months. Cheap, newly made beer can be made one day and shipped to the customer in a day or two after, the "sparkle" having been artifically given. That is why it can be sold cheap, although often it is sold for the same price as aged beer.

So keenly did the brewmaster of the Minneapolis Brewing company watch the growth of brewing that, of late, Golden Grain Belt Beers have been given a place of honor among beers of the world. Foreign brewers, journeying through America, carried home with them, praises of the brewery where Golden Grain Belt Beers are brewed, as a model plant, worth studying in perfecting their own breweries. Furthermore, these experts gave handsome praise by stating that the Golden Grain Belt Beers were the best they had tasted in the west.

At this Minneapolis brewery, where all Golden Grain Belt Beers are bottled, there is one of the few government tanks of the country, so that the beer is bottled direct from a sealed tank instead of being drawn from barrels. This gives a purer product and admits of greater age and hence better medicinal properties. Is it any wonder that every one connected with the Minneapolis Brewing Company are proud of their beer, and welcome strangers to visit their brewery at any and all times?

When you come to Minneapolis, don't fail to visit the great model brewery of the Minneapolis Brewing Company where Golden Grain Belt Beers are brewed and aged. Guides will take you on the half-hour trip which you will say, when completed, was one of the most interesting of your lifetime. You will not be shown the very largest brewery in the world, but you will see one that is noted as being one of the most perfect. The latch string is out, and any time you are in Minneapolis you are welcome.

You must come prepared to expect a fine trip. Courteous guides will explain every point, and you will learn why Dr. P. M. Hall, noted health commissioner, stated that the only way milk could be made safe to use, would be by adopting the kind of methods used in this great brewery.

Whooping Cough Superstitions.

Whooping cough is the subject of more quaint superstitions in England than almost any other disease. In Northamptonshire it is believed that if a small quantity of hair is cut from the nape of the sick child's neck, rolled in a piece of meat and given to a dog the whooping cough will be transferred to the animal. In Cornwall the child is fed with bread and butter which has been passed three times under the belly of a piebald horse. In Lancashire they still tell you that whooping cough will never attack a child that has ridden on a bear.—London Answers.

Well Worth It.

As dentists know very well that people do not call upon them merely for pleasure, they are not likely to be offended at this bit from the Washington Star:

"Didn't that man complain when you charged him for a broken appointment?"

"No," replied the dentist. "He said breaking an appointment with me is worth every cent it costs."

A Question of Title.

"After another season," said Farmer Corntossel, "I guess we'll have a chef."

"What's a chef?" asked his wife.

"A chef is a man with a big enough vocabulary to give the soup a different name every day."—Washington Star.

A Subsidy.

"I see so much in the newspapers about subsidies. What does a subsidy mean, Frank?"

"A subsidy, Grace, is where I give you $25 for going to see your mother instead of having her come to see you."—Judge.
