CHATTANOOGA:

SATURDAY MORNING, NOV. 22, 1862.

THE SITUATION.

In Virginia the Yankees are wisely confining themselves to petty raids and predatory excursions, on an aggravated, but exceedingly small scale. The most that can be said of their recent "demonstration" against Fredericksburg, (the principal one of these flying visits,) is, that they succeeded in carrying off a few inoffensive citizens, temporarily scattering others, and frightening the wits out of all the geese, chickens and other denizens of the poultry yard, in the unhappy vicinity of their march.

The intent of this valorous exploit was evidently an imitation of Stewart's dash. Who it was that commanded on the occasion is not stated. But unluckily for his reputation, his emulation of Stewart, comprehends merely the dash, without the danger, for there was no one in the region to meet, except harmless men, women and children; and, before a more formidable resistance could arrive, these gallant caballeros gallopped off, as fast as they came.

The confusion arising out of a change of commanders, seems to retard the operations of the enemy all along the line of the Blue Ridge. It is quite possible that he is about to change his base. The Richmond papers seem to think the next "tiger leap" on that city, will be from the South East.

Rumors of the wildest kind prevail daily in the Confederate capital, which seems to be as perfect a receptacle of unreliable news, as of folly, knavery, and plug-uglyism. "On yesterday," says the Examiner of Monday, "the city was full of a rumor to the effect that Jackson and A. P. Hill, having recaptured Harper's Ferry, and no end of shoes and quartermaster's stores, had re-crossed the Potomac into Maryland. After due enquiry we have failed to find any foundation for this story. Persons who left Winchester on Friday and arrived here last night, report Jackson at Winchester, and A. P. Hill at Charlestown.

Our own opinion is that the cold weather and untravelable roads will nip the present campaign, or rather the anticipated campaign, in the bud, and defeat the hopes of the Yankees concerning the new idol they have stuck up in place of McClellan.

Would to God we were as sure of getting into Nashville, as we are of holding Richmond, during the coming winter!

"Food was not only scarce, but indifferent in quality, until we hung a few contractors when the beef market began to improve amazingly."—Napier's History of the Peninsular War.

The indelible warnings of history teach us that it is as essential in time of war to overpower and cast out those domestic enemies, who assail a people from within, as it is to defeat the invader, who comes from abroad, and assails the nation from without. There are in every country and community a class of men who have nothing to gain from the ordinary routine of peace, but who may and do prosper above all others in times of disturbance. Such men are alive to every chance; they miss no occasion whereby their pockets may be enriched at the cost of their neighbors; and nothing pleases them so much as that which excites a universal fear and foreboding. Thus the approach, or apprehension of a famine in the land; the total lack of some necessary article of daily comfort, even of daily existence; in sickness the want of medicines; in winter the want of fuel, of clothing, of shoes and stockings, sends a thrill of pleasure through their hollow bosoms, which sets all the brazen chords of cupidity and cruelty in motion.

Prosperity in time of war, especially in time of revolution, is a bad index to any man's character; for he who can grow sleek and fat whilst all around him dwindles and grows slim; who can add to his wealth when most men are losing their all, must, in nine cases out of ten, be the recipient of illegitimate gain. Nothing is truer than that war is the last of all seasons for honest men to thrive. Honest men are usually brave men, and brave men generally go out and fight. They have as little opportunity as inclination to enter the ranks of those who, instead of struggling for their country, are engaged in the heated conflict for the "loaves and fishes." The miser, whose blood has never known the "purple of the wine of life," the usurer and the thief outright, are the men who make fortunes out of the desolation of war, just as only the carrion crow is gorged off the sickening debris of the battle-field.

Everybody is engaged in a crusade against the speculators. But what is everybody's business, according to an old saying, is nobody's ken. The Government and the authorities are the parties to take the matter in hand; and were they to carry out on an extended scale the precedent of the British officials, quoted by Napier, in his "History of the Peninsular War," we should see that not only the "beef market," but every other market, would improve amazingly.

The foreign relations of the Government at Washington are in little better condition than those of the Government at Richmond. It is plain that the powers of Europe not only see no particular cause of interfering in the American imbroglio, but are, on the contrary, admonished by many reasons of interest and expediency to withhold every step which could possibly influence the contest either way. We do not doubt that the sympathies of abolition England and of despotic Russia are against the South, because in the one instance the people, who know nothing about it, hate slavery, and in the other, a crowned head, secure only through the submission of his subjects, hates revolution and wishes to see it universally suppressed. But both these powers are checked by a jealous fear of the consolidated magnitude and consequent potency of the United States, should it put down the rebellion before it ruins itself; and again, the Cabinet, the press and the people of Great Britain have always discovered a particular dislike to their distant relatives on this side of the Atlantic. Hence we have experienced no especial damage from either, although we can hope for no especial benefits. In France, other objects of domestic and semi-domestic concern, relating to Italy and the Roman question, have attracted the leading attention of the Emperor, who, had he been ever so favorably disposed towards the Confederate States, has had other fish to fry, and could afford to wait. Cotton, we have found, is not king of the world; and besides, rumor says, enough has escaped and is escaping to keep the Cotton-tots quiet. In a word, we are not half as big as our foolish self-love has imagined, much resembling the fly on the carriage wheel amazingly. But Heaven help them! the Yankees are finding out that if we are insignificant, they are odious; and that between the two the desire of Europe is not directed to the success of either party, but to the failure of both. It would be a goodly sight to see the whole country so used up, and the energy of its combatants so exhausted, as to leave a once fair fabric and a still splendid domain; prey for trans-atlantic speculators. New England would form a pretty jewel in the ear of Canada. The Louisiana's and Florida's would be delightful rendezvoux for the fleets of France and Spain. That vast territory which empties its rivers of gold into the Pacific sea, would supply a universal company of stock jobbers with bullion enough to enrich all the broken credits in Europe, and would, moreover, become a haven and home for a new world of navigation, and a noble depot for the spoils of an unexplored island tropic. Why, therefore, and a game of cat and dog, which gives such a promise of leaving the spectators all the trophies of battle? Better foment the discord; better incense the parties engaged; better throw repeated obstacles in the way of each, as it seems to be gaining ground, so as to prolong the contest, and ensure its result. This is the game the sagacious animals of Europe are playing with the simple ones of America. Luckily for us it hurts the North more than ourselves, because the wiser of us, being in revolt, never expected much help from the potentates of established order, whilst our enemy expected nothing else. We are fighting away, without any interference, and, left to do our work unmolested, we shall accomplish our purpose and independence; whilst the North, which has undertaken not only to whip and subject us, but to preserve itself meanwhile, will go out of the conflict defeated and disgraced by one enemy, to meet as bad a one at home in the shape of discontent and taxes. It will then find itself worse hemmed in and obstructed by its foreign relations, than it is now. We will commend ourselves to all Europe by our exports. The United States will have only the doubtful recommendation of being a commercial and manufacturing rival.

☞ It must be confessed that, however immoral the influence wrought by a state of war upon the society in whose immediate midst it exists, our general, universal and far-reaching social system, as it flourished before the revolution, can not be much worsted, and will not be permanently impaired; on the contrary, is pretty sure of being purified by the chastening fires of grievous experience; and this good, which is to come out of much tribulation, will effect a more surprising revolution in the character of our men and women, perhaps, than in the nature of our political relations, the first great cause of the conflict.

☞ Calson is appearing successfully in Paris.

☞ Abon Ben Lincoln (may his tribe decrease!)
Awoke t'other night to anything but peace,
And saw—just where his curtain parted—so—
A phantom with a face as white as snow;
McClellan 'twas, and like "poor Tom a-cold;"—
Exceeding gin had made Ben Lincoln bold—
He round him drew his quilt, not cloak,
Folded his arms, and thus he spoke—
"Good God McClellan! this can't be a joke!
Is some one hurt?" the figure in vague smoke
Evanished. Then this brave Ben Lincoln
Much mused and marvelled till next night again
The specter came in thunder and in rain,
Whereat he took no special time to think on,
This phantom most unnaturally white;
"Avaunt!" cried he; "avaunt, and quit my sight!"
The morrow morn he rose, bewildered and dismayed,
To find his mandate literally obeyed.
"Like good Ben Adhem" Greeley cried "of old,
"You thus have writ yourself in books of gold."
"Why do you think so?" stuttered out Ben Link.
"'Twas not so well I half began to think,
"Let's dry our eyes, and so let's take a drink!"

☞ The signs of the times affix three new questions and answers to the political primmer. Q. "What is Government?" A. "A machine for making thieves." Q. "What is its chief object?" A. "To pay 50 cts a pound for bacon, twelve dollars a barrel for flour, and a hundred per cent above reason for everything else it buys." Q. "Very good—now, what constitutes a State or government?" A. Not high walled battlements forsooth." Q. "What then?" A. "Why plenty of Treasury pap and an indefinite number of contractors."

☞ The Courier takes one of our late paragraphs to task as ambiguous. Charleston S. C. was the city indicated. We should not omit to say that we mean the Charleston Courier!

The election of Ex-Gov Herschell V. Johnson by the Legislature of Georgia to a seat in the Confederate State Senate, conveys a striking proof of the entire freedom of that State from any former political prejudices or partisan influence. Only two years ago Gov. Johnson represented a very small minority as the second nominee on a national ticket. He is now returned to the council of the land by those who perhaps in that contest constituted his most extreme opposition. The fact shows a just disregard of anything but intrinsic merit, truly praiseworthy.

☞ The New York Times, alluding to the action of the Bermuda authorities towards Capt. Wilkes, says it was "marked by great politeness." Heaven help us from such polite attentions! Such courtesies may constitute new-fashioned politeness, but we can say with Old Hardcastle, they "look a good deal like old fashioned impudence."

☞ Beauregard is as busy as a bee on the coast. In fact, he has drawn a bee-line of defense between Charleston and Savannah, and means to "stick to it."

☞ The life of John Wilson, (Christopher North,) announced in Edinburgh, will be a vastly interesting piece of literary biography.

☞ Edwin Forrest, the tragedian, is spoken of for a Brigadier Generalship in the Northern army. We have as good an actor and a better Brigadier in the Confederate service, of the same name.

☞ The new novel of Marian Harlan, is not highly flattered by the Yankee literati. Indeed it is said to be decidedly flat.

☞ The best State in the South, at present, is considered to be real estate.

The New Georgia Senator.

The Macon Telegraph speaks thus of the Hon. Herschell V. Johnson, just elected Confederate States Senator by the Georgia Legislature.

The Legislature has done itself great honor in the election of Ex-Gov. Johnson to the Confederate Senate. It has dared to overlook transient popular prejudice, springing from the independent political course of the Governor in the last U. S. presidential election, and to avail the State and the nation, at their time of need, of a grand, massive intellect—an incorruptible heart and a noble and elevated temper. It has freely bestowed an unsolicited trust; for we have reason to believe that Gov. John on refused to become a candidate for the office, and authorized no friend to announce or to vote for him. The result, then, is peculiarly honorable to both—to the Legislature for the patriotic sacrifice of all minor and more unimportant considerations to the single object of selecting an able and worthy incumbent; and to the Governor under circumstances so highly flattering and complimentary.

And so far as the people of Georgia are concerned we venture to say that, whoever may disapprove this action from personal considerations, or from any of those prejudices which have survived old party organizations, very few indeed will doubt the substantial propriety and justice of the selection. The expansive intellect, high attainments, and large experience of Gov. Johnson will make him of invaluable service as a colleague and adviser to our whole delegation in Congress, and in the Senate he will take at once a rank and influence befitting the position of his State in the Confederacy. He will find no superiors and few peers in that body.

He will go to the Senate as we would have him go—uncommitted and free to act to the best of his judgment for the common good of the Confederacy. He may perhaps differ with the administration on some points, though we know of none; but whether differing or agreeing, we are mistaken in the man if his course will be at all partisan or factious, or calculated to impair the substantial harmony which should characterize the public counsels at such a time of external peril. He is a large-hearted, high toned man, and there is nothing of the cramped, hide-bound or crooked politician about him. Without definitions, or pledges, or instructions, we are willing to entrust the great power he will exercise in his new position to his clear head, solid judgment and honest purpose. It was in this feeling and spirit, no doubt, that the Legislature selected him, and we are as well persuaded the great body of the people will welcome him to his new public arena with equal liberality.

It is reported confidently that, in a place not two hundred miles from Savannah, a lot of 1,000 pairs of shoes was offered to a Government agent, but rejected because they were one-half inch lower than the red tape regulations. Of course our soldiers will prefer going without shoes to wearing any but the regulation style.

The London Quarterly, for October, has an elaborate article on "The Confederate Struggle and Recognition," advocating recognition not only as due to the South and to the history and conduct of England under similar cases, but to the interests and rights of English subjects resident in the South, who are now unprotected, unless through the courtesy and forbearance of authorities not recognized by their government.

Instructions to Enrolling Officers.

CHATTANOOGA, Oct. 14, 1862.

It is the duty of Enrolling officers to faithfully enroll every man in their respective Districts observing the classification herein-after ordered. If residents of the District are absent or cannot be found, they must be enrolled. The description will be given from memory, or information, and must be so stated under the head of "Remarks."

Conscripts will remain in their respective counties until called for by me.

When a call is made the Chairman will superintend the Enrolling officers. And they will see that all persons embraced in the call obey it. Immediately after the day appointed for assembling the conscripts, the Enrolling officers are required to arrest each man of conscript age, who may be found in their districts without a certificate of exemption. They may call upon the Sheriff and Constables to aid them, and if other assistance be necessary, they will report the fact to me, and troops will be furnished.

Enrolling officers remain in their Districts, and their duties do not end with the first enrollment. They are required to watch the District and to make weekly reports. They will be held to a strict accountability for the truth of their reports, and whoever of them wilfully fails promptly to arrest or report persons of conscript age as directed above, will himself be dealt with. The Confederate Government gives them ample compensation, and the work must be done thoroughly. Chairmen of the county Courts are charged with the general superintendence of the enrollment in their counties. JAS. L. HOPKINS, A. D. C.
