THE DAILY REBEL.

Office on Market Street, over the Bank of Tennessee.

CHATTANOOGA:
THURSDAY MORNING, DEC. 4, 1862.

THE SITUATION.

GEN. JOSEPH E. JOHNSTON, arrived in this city last evening, and will establish his Headquarters here for the present, and will enter immediately upon the duties to which he has been assigned, in the command of the Western Department, now composed of the Districts of East and Middle Tennessee, and the army of the Mississippi. With so able a leader at the head of our armies full confidence will be restored, and our troops inspired with an enthusiasm which will make them invincible. The following is a list of his staff officers as far as selected:—

Col. B. S. EWELL, A. A. Gen'l and Chief of Staff; Lieut. Col. T. B. LAMAR, Asst. Adj't Gen'l; Capt. A. P. MASON, Asst. Adj't Gen'l; Col. Chas. FOUNTLEROY, Insp't Gen'l; Lieut. Col. E. J. HARVIE, Asst. Insp't Gen'l; Major J. B. PRADOS, Asst. Insp't Gen'l; Major A. M. BARBOUR, Chief Quarter Master; Major J. BUCK MOORE, Quarter Master; Capt. W. M. CARY, Asst. Q'r Master; Lieut. J. BARROLL WASHINGTON, Aid-de-Camp; Lieut. WADE HAMPTON, Jr. Aid-de-Camp.

Of the Yankee army around Nashville, the Division of Gen. Sill is still between the former city and the village of Lavergne, while Crittenden and Thomas are near the turnpike leading to Lebanon. Another Division is said to be on the Nolensville road. Portions of Rosseau's command are still coming into the capital from the direction of Kentucky.

The Nashville Dispatch of the 29th, contains the form of a bond which will be exacted from "all citizens irrespective of past politics." Also the guarantee of protection which will be afforded those who furnish the necessary bonds. Those who decline the oath, and bond, will be immediately sent outside the Federal lines. If secesus and Andy Johnson sign the document.

Some little excitement was occasioned a short time since, by a report that the Federals were advancing in large force, and preparations were made to receive them. This report proved to be incorrect, and the camp relapsed into its customary quiet. Subsequently the forces under General Wheeler, had occasional skirmishes with the enemy's cavalry, and drove them back towards Nashville. A skirmish also occurred, on Monday at Beard's Mills, seven miles South of Lebanon. Very little damage done on either side, though the cannonading was heard at Murfreesboro' quite plainly at different times during the day. We do not believe a general engagement, is looked for in that quarter for some time, and it is probable that with the exception of occasional Brigade skirmishes, both armies will remain in statu quo for the remainder of the winter.

Not many days since we noticed in a copy of the Nashville Dispatch the announcement that among the Confederate officers captured during Gen. Forrest's attack upon that city, was a son of J. G. Harris, no other than our gallant and handsome young Nashville friend, Capt. Jos. Harris, formerly of Rutledge's Battery, 1st Tennessee Artillery, but more recently of Gen. John Morgan's command. Capt. Harris had been enjoying a pleasant sojourn with his relatives in the vicinity of Nashville, and was with them at the time the demonstrations were being made on Nashville by Gen. Forrest. The Federals happening to throw a force out the Brentwood Road, where our friend the Captain was luxuriating in a brief lionization among old acquaintances, he found himself suddenly surrounded and attempted to effect his escape back into our lines. Turning the base of an elevation near the house, he suddenly found himself face to face with a squad of Stokes' cavalry. Without the remotest inclination to parley, and without evincing the slightest desire to hear what the Captain had to say for himself—the Yankees opened fire, sending half a dozen balls through his talma, and one of them close enough to his shoulder to "raise the skin," and render his position extremely embarrassing.

Though a gallant and somewhat recklessly daring soldier, the Captain is not devoid of cool judgment and presence of mind. He saw there was no chance to make a successful fight, and so he "changed his base," and "retired in good order." He returned to the house, and the Yankees pursued him, and surrounded the building, which they threatened to burn down if he did not surrender. Seeing that all chance of escape was gone, and not wishing to involve his friends, he complied with the demand, and was carried into Nashville a prisoner of war. The officer in charge of the squad, who was evidently a "light-fingered" gentleman, relieved him of all the "small change" about his person—confiscated his horse and saddle, arms, etc.

He was subsequently paroled to the city, and had "a good time" of it amongst his many friends in Nashville. Captain H. reached this city a few days ago, where he will remain until an exchange is effected.

☞ Our readers must not be surprised if they occasionally see a news-item repeated in the REBEL. Our cotemporaries are so much in the habit of publishing our paragraphs without giving the proper credit, that we often find ours, if clipping our own squibs, in the hurry of business, and crediting them to somebody else.

LINES DOWN.—No dispatches were received at this office yesterday and last night, in consequence of the wires having been broken down at various points along the lines, by the recent storms.

☞ Gen. S. B. ANDERSON was in the city yesterday, looking much improved in health. We learn that he has reported for duty, and ready to be assigned to position.

A MOST DAMNING AND EXTRAORDINARY BANK ROBBERY IN EUROPE.—The subjoined letter, extracted from a late English paper, relates the particulars of a criminal enterprise of surpassing audacity in its conception and of success in its execution. The robbery was committed on the banking house of Parodi, the richest banker in all Italy. The facts are these, and are detailed in a letter from Turin:

The banking house of Parodi, the richest banker in Genoa, is not far from the post office in the Via Nuova, one of the main thoroughfares in the city, and always full of traffic. On the two days before the robbery, Signor Parodi was repeatedly visited by an elegantly dressed stranger, who desired information respecting a loan, and as to the mode in which a large sum might be remitted from Rome. At 2 p. m. on the 1st of May, Signor Parodi was engaged, with his son and eight clerks in receiving payments and deposits, when the same person presented himself again, accompanied by another in travelling costume. Recognizing him at once, Parodi told him he had not been able to procure the desired information. "Thank you" replied the stranger, "but this is not my present business." At the same time, two other persons, dressed nearly in the same style, came in, whilst another pair appeared at the entrance and took post there. One of these four then produced a large coil of silk cord, and all the six drew from their pockets small or double-barrelled pistols or daggers. "Silence!" cried the leader of the gang, "the first man who speaks is a dead man!" and—there was not a word spoken. In the twinkle of an eye, the clerks were secured by skilfully applied lasso, and laid down on the ground, feet and hands together, the leader meanwhile keeping his pistol at Signor Parodi's breast, and another of the gang standing pistol in hand at the door of the inner room. The ten prisoners being thus bound, each of them had his mouth stopped with a cravat. But meanwhile other persons came to the bank on business, and these were attended to by the gang who were posted at the entrance door. The moment they stepped in they were secured in the same way, led into the inner room, and bound and gagged as the others had been before them. Seven were thus served, among whom was a peasman, who brought sixty thousand francs in bank notes, which were overlooked by the robbers. These preliminary operations having been accomplished, four of the robbers remained on guard while the other two sacked 200,000 francs in notes, and 100,000 francs in gold. Content with this booty they kissed the banker's son on the forehead, telling him to cheer up, but to keep silence for at least half an hour longer, and away they went quite coolly, in sight of a great number of persons in the court yard and the street. They separated at once, and disappeared in various directions. Notice was given by telegraph to all the railway stations, and all the outward bound vessels were examined, but not a trace of the six thieves could be discovered.

Yankee Movements on the Coast.

It has been definitely ascertained that the entire Yankee fleet has left Port Royal, and proceeded to some other point on the coast. It is also believed that the Abolition troops on the coast of Carolina decamped along with it, and are now en route to a new theatre of operations.

Everybody seems to be in the dark as regards the destination they have in view, and the military, we learn, are as much in doubt as the rest of us. We have heard much speculation within the last twenty four hours, and a variety of opinions advanced. Some believe that the fleet and troops have been ordered forward to co-operate in an attack on Charleston, some that a landing on the Georgia coast with a view of making an assault on Savannah is designed; whilst another class, to which we belong, are of the opinion that they have been ordered to the Virginia coast to unite with the army of Burnside in the long-promised reduction of Richmond. However, this may be a few days will unravel the mystery.

We are pleased to see that General Beauregard, with his accustomed precaution, is actively engaged in preparations to meet them at any point they may select in his jurisdiction. Let all the commanders do the same, we shall then have no cause to apprehend any serious result from the movement.

* * * * * * *

There was a report in town last evening that the Port Royal fleet was off Tybee, but on investigation we were unable to trace it to any authentic source.

☞ The next session of the Confederate Congress will commence at the Capitol in Richmond, on the second Monday in January. The State Legislature will reassemble on the first Wednesday in January.

Vera Cruz advices of the 1st say that no further engagement had taken place. The Mexicans were endeavoring to place Puebla in a proper state of defense. Almonte is no longer protected by the French, and will leave the country.

BY GRAPE-VINE AND OTHERWISE.

ON DITS OF THE DAY.

CHATTANOOGA.....Wednesday Evening, 8 P. M.

After plentiful showers of rain, the clouds have vanished behind the hills of Chattanooga, and a flood of glorious shunshine has descended upon the leaves and branches of this Grapevine, delicious and Spring-like. It has invited forth the feathered songsters of the forest, and one little bird that hops merrily from twig to twig about my venerable proportions this evening tells me much of the current idle gossip of the world, which has gathered in his restless flittings from point to point.

On dit, that the "blockade" is still being "run" in and about Nashville, notwithstanding the increase of the army of Yankees in that ill-fated city. Instances have come under my observations repeatedly of late, in which parties have succeeded in going into Nashville and have returned, by the underground railway or over the "Grapevine Telegraph."

It is believed here that Gen. Jo. Johnson will establish his headquarters permanently at Chattanooga, for the winter. The rumor that he desired to intercept the news gossip that travels over the Rebel's grapevine line, is without the slighest foundation in fact. On the contrary, it has been hinted to me from high authority, that the General has been a constant reader of this department of the Rebel from infancy and will probably regulate his more important strategic movements in Tennessee according to the demonstrations of the enemy as reported over this line.

The "thunderer," of this journal mysteriously disappeared from the vicinity before day yesterday morning. He was last seen, I am informed crossing the Tennessee at Bridgeport, with a marriage license in one hand, and a bottle of—("ha-ha ha!") in the other.

An amusing on dit, here, to the effect, that Judge Humphreys had occasion, in passing judgment on a prisoner the other day in Knoxville, to reprimand him, as an "old offender." Said the Judge with characteristic dignity—"Sir, you have been brought here so often, that there is little hope, that the work of reform will ever be successful in your case—I shall fine you 1,50, in 1,50."

Waving a gratified rebel across his breast, with a dilapidated beaver, which he held in his left hand, and bending majestically at the same time towards the seat of justice, the incorrigible "old offender" replied with mock gravity:

"I should say so, Judge!"

With imperturbable coolness, he then marched out of the door—not has he ever paid the fine either, so far as heard from. The officers were actually too much astonished at his refreshing impudence to collect the fine.

A late dispatch from Nashville, informs us the Yankee officials have abandoned the idea of combining their heads in company form, is on the increase in the Yankee capital. An insect of doubtful name, and of unusually large size, was discovered in that city the other day with U. S. marked on its back and a canteen swung round its neck.

An on dit from Memphis, that Bill Alexander, a handsome young clerk in the Branch Bank of "Pharoah" at that place, has married the celebrated "La Dame Blanche" of astrological celebrity, and the parties have gone to Paris.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT No. 2,
TULLAHOMA, Nov 17, 1862.

General Orders No. 102.

The General Commanding announces with pain, the shameful fact, that numerous officers and soldiers are absent from their proper duties, have or sanction the evil so prejudicial to the service, and discredit to those who wearing the uniform of the Confederate States, are now living in ease and idleness instead of shouldering the common perils and duties of their comrades in arms, must be discharged. Such gross dereliction of duty which in the presence of an active and powerful enemy, calls not only for rebuke from the Commanding General, but also for efficient measures on the part of the citizens of this State to insure the action of such delinquents. The Commanding General calls upon all officers who continue to be absent with leave shall be brought before the "Examining Board" authorized by an act of Congress, entitled "An act to relieve the army of disqualified, disabled and incompetent officers," in order that their names may be dropped from the rolls of the Army whose glory they seek to defend, but whose dangers and toils they are unwilling to share.
