A Tramp's Tough Story.

"I remember a wonderful case as came under my personal observation when I wuz 'travelin'' in East Tennessee. I struck one of them little mountain towns one time when they wuz holding county court. Every man had a bottle of moonshine, and they wuz all feelin' mighty happy. Finally they got a leetle bit too hilarious, and a fight sprung up betwixt a great big duffer and a leetle bit of a wiry feller. The big duffer could 's eat the little feller up, clothes and all, but the first thing he done was to pull out one of these old pot-metal knives and jab the blade into the leetle feller's neck It went in right alongside the jugular, and then it bent kinder round and under it. When the big feller went to pull it out he ripped the leetle feller's jugular right into, and you oughter seed the blood fly. It squirted about twenty-five feet. As the leetle feller dropped everybody in the crowd cried, 'Oh he's a goner; his jugular vein's cut,' and they expected to see him croak inside of three seconds, but there was one of them mountain doctors there, and to look at him you'd think he didn't know a jugular vein from a trombone. 'Stand back' said he: 'give me a chance at him,' and he elbowed his way through the crowd to where the leetle feller lay breathin' his last. He pulled out of his pocket somethin' as looked like a crooked darnin' needle, and then he fished around in the wound until he caught hold of both ends of the jugular vein and pulled 'em out. Then he tied the ends tight with a piece of thread to keep the blood from squirtin' out until an old feller in the crowd whittled down an old pipe-stem to make it fit in the jugular. When it was shaved down small enough the old doctor inserted the pipe stem and tied the ends of the vein tight around it. In less than two minutes that leetle feller was on his feet and looking round for the feller that cut him.

"You mean to say he recovered?"

"Course he did, and you'll find the case recorded in the medical works. Only case of the kind ever heard of in America."

"And the pipe-stem never bothered him?"

"No; only it made him sick at the stomach at first. The stem was a good deal stronger than the kind he had been used to hamflin', and it made him a leetle bit dizzy for a few days."—Louisville Commercial.

Humorous Definitions.

A smart, pithy or humorous definition often furnishes a happy illustration of the proverbial brevity which is the soul of wit. A boy once said that "dust is mud with the juice squeezed out." A fan, we learn from another juvenile source, is "a thing to brush warm off with;" and a monkey, "a small boy with a tail;" salt "what makes your potatoes taste bad when you don't put any on;" wakefulness, "eyes all the time coming unbuttoned;" and "ice, water that staid out too late in the cold and went to sleep."

A school boy asked to define the word "sob" whimpered out: "It means when a feller don't mean to cry and it bursts out itself." A youngster was asked to give his idea of the meaning of "responsibility," so he said: Well, supposing I had only two buttons on my trousers, and one came off, all the responsibility would rest on the other button."

To hit off a jury as "a body of men organized to find out which side has the smartest lawyers," is to satirize many of our intelligent fellow-countrymen." The word "suspicion" is, in the opinion of a jealous husband, "a feeling that compels you to try to find out something which you don't wish to know." A good definition of a "Pharisee" is a "tradesman who uses long prayers and short weights;" of a humbug, "one who agrees with everybody;" and a tyrant, "the other version of somebody's hero." Thin soup, according to an Irish mendicant, is "a quart of water boiled down to a pint, to make it strong."

Of definitions of a bachelor—"an unaltered man," "a singular being," and "a target for a miss," are apt enough. A walking-stick may be described as "the old man's strength and the young man's weakness;" and an umbrella as "a fair and foul weather friend who has had so many ups and downs in the world." A watch may be hit off as a "second hand affair," and spectacles as "second sight" or "friendly glasses." "Fashion" has been cleverly hit off as "an abitrary disease which leads all geese to follow in single file the one goose that sets the style.—Boston Herald.

Prof. Austin states that nearly all gas pipes are pervious to carbonic oxide, and that to insure safety they should be galvanized or painted.
