Ship Builders Optimistic on Future Trade

Shipping Companies Expect Next Year to Set Record in Traffic for Europe

Optimism among foreign shipbuilders is increasing steadily and the sentiment to-day is entirely different from six months ago, according to Robert Haig, vice-president of the Sun Shipbuilding Company, who has just returned from an extensive tour of England, Germany, Sweden and Norway. His remarks were made before the monthly meeting of the Delaware River section of the Atlantic Coast Shipbuilders' Association in Philadelphia, and are distributed to members of the association by its secretary, Clarence S. King.

Mr. Haig made a careful study of conditions affecting shipbuilding and engineering industries and said upon his return that foreign shipping men believe the most serious of world troubles are at an end and the large crops this year will give an appreciable impetus to the carrying trade.

"The attitude of the typical foreign shipowner was expressed by one man in this way," said Mr. Haig. "He said that shipping was far from being in an unsound condition and although he had an excess of tonnage on hand, it did not overbalance what he would have required under normal conditions, had business continued without the interruptions caused by war. He pointed out that the crux of the matter is that the purchasing capacity of the individual trader had practically been destroyed throughout the larger part of Europe, and until the merchant is able to revive his business and establish credits sufficiently elastic to carry on the world's industry, very slow progress will be made toward general recovery in the shipping business. The same opinion was voiced from various quarters in Germany, Norway and Sweden."

Remarking upon the lack of unemployment in Germany, Mr. Haig said, shipbuilders there say they have orders running until the end of 1923, but that the exchange situation, with a threat of financial collapse, is causing uneasiness.

Referring to conditions in England, Mr. Haig found shipbuilders and shipowners still endeavoring to adjust themselves to a new industrial environment, but he said, it was significant that the large passenger lines are going ahead with their plans in anticipation of better times.

"While I was there," he said, "the Cunard Line had started work on two or three large mail boats now in course of construction, upon which work had been suspended indefinitely, and orders had been given to bring them to completion at the earliest possible date without overtime. It is believed these preparations are being made in anticipation of western passenger travel in 1922, which from all accounts probably will be the largest ever known, and English shipping men say that when passenger travel is heavy good business is almost sure to follow."

Cunard Line Resumes England-Canada Service

The Cunard Steamship Company announced yesterday that its service between English and Canadian ports, which was abandoned during the war because of the destruction of all of its vessels on this route by enemy submarines, will be resumed with a new fleet of oil burners, beginning weekly sailings on May 6, 1922.

The steamers range in size from 13,000 to 16,700 tons and are all over 500 feet long. They are Tyrrhenia of 16,700 tons, a sister ship to the new Cameronia, with accommodations for 600 cabin and 1,200 third class passengers; the Antonia, Andania and Ausonia, each of 14,000 tons, with accommodations for 500 cabin and 1,200 third class passengers, and the 13,000-ton Albania, with accommodations for 500 third class passengers. Later this fleet will be augmented by the Asconia, Alaunia and Aurania, each of 14,000 tons, with accommodations for 500 cabin and 1,200 third class. The average speed of these steamers will be sixteen knots. With the exception of the Tyrrhenia, the names of all of these ships begin and end with "A," and will be known as the "A" ships.

There will be three lines in the new service, one between Montreal and Liverpool, one betwen Montreal and London and the third between Montreal and Plymouth.
