Our Illustrated Edition!

R CHRISTMAS.

WITH NEW AND

Startling Embellishments!

BY

[illegible] SPECIAL ARTIST.

WITH a characteristic liberality, and a spirit of enterprise worthy the age we live in, the proprietors of the DAILY CHATTANOOGA REBEL (who, by the way, are a regular nest of "bricks,") have, at an unheard of expense, got up for this Christmas Edition a column of original illustrations, from designs by the best masters, (the chief design being to humbug the public.)

Determined to be outdone by no similar institution, and this being the second illustrated weekly started in the South, (but by no means the weakliest of the two) the proprietors take pleasure in presenting, by way of introduction, a likeness of—

[illegible] remarkable face, ladies and gentle[illegible] genius, wit, jocularity, and cool living. You may readily conceive, from the expression, as well as the rotundity of the face, that the original doesn't board at the "Beolbeaf House."

As our readers have doubtless read Pollards "First Year of the War," and as they would doubtless like to get a glimpse of the Second Year," we here present them with a photo[illegible] of—

THE ONLY COPY EXTANT.

While on the subject of light literature, and the fact being constantly presented to our mind by the "Savannah Republican," that the correspondent "P. W. A." was about to receive a present from somebody, on account of his superior qualifications as a writer of military speculations, we have anticipated the Committee of Presentation, and present him with the sword worn by Gen. Taylor in the Florida War, and presented to him by the picture of

P. W. A.

[illegible] Sword for the Press.

We next present our readers with a copy of the man who struck a blow for the South [illegible]

Not many days ago a paragraph was going the rounds of the press concerning a man who was arrested for selling boots in Knoxville at $50 a pair, and put in with the manuscripts. After sending agents all over the country to take his likeness for this edition, we were unable to find him, but succeeded at an enormous expense in procuring a copy

MAN OF HIS BOOTS.

The reader must not be surprised at the immense cost of getting up this engraving. He must bear in mind the immense cost of [illegible]

We tried to get a likeness of a Quartermaster who is losing money by the war—but so many of our friends in that line wanted to sit for the picture, that we had to abandon the idea. We presume, therefore, it must be a losing business—

GEN. "SHERMAN."

We sent a special agent underground to Nashville to get a photograph of the Rev. Wm. G. Brownlow, better known as "old Smut," the Parson, which was taken just before "old smut" carried out his threat of taking the Methodist Publishing House

BEFORE TAKING HOUSE

It will be seen that his coun[illegible] marks of the terrible battles he [illegible] in East Tennessee with the "[illegible]rebels," before he got out of [illegible] bullet through his old head, [illegible] injure the brain, because of [illegible] sence of that part of his [illegible] another bullet through his no[illegible] vents that organ from recognizing by smell all the dirty things that come out of his mouth.

The next picture is that of

COL. PELTRAN,

or The Gentleman who discovered the Opeliky Salt Mines.

This is an exact copy of Jeff., taken from the original in the Illustrated News.—It will be seen that he has "an eye like Mars to threaten and command—also a sword which he keeps for the same purpose.

JEFF THOMPSON.

The two following pictures are marked illustrations of the wonderful revolution in prices for eatables during the war.

Mississippi Chicken before the War—Price 25 Cents.

Mississippi Chicken during the War—Price $4 50 Cents.

[illegible] appears with a picture of "Old Sachem Bitters" in the act of inventing a new substitute for coffee.

OLD SACHEM BITTERS.

The next picture represents what is meant by running the blockade in Chattanooga. It is only an allegorical or hieroglyphical representation of the "runner" keeping a given number of boxes in view.

COTTON.—At the market price of cotton today, says an exchange, our now useless staple is of value enough to pay, of itself, every dollar, which the Confederate States owe. At this moment there are 3,000,000 bales of cotton within the country, which, at the ruling prices of the staple now, is worth $700,000,000. Since the world began no nation has ever had in its hands so much wealth in a single article of production. The consumption of cotton is increasing in a ratio far faster than the increased means of its production, and this results in a great degree, from the new fabrics to which it is being applied, to say nothing of the increase of the world's population, and the new civilizations which immediately require its use. Regarding these interesting facts and statistics with respect to this annual store of wealth, it is impossible to suppose that the sum of debt which this year will accumulate can ever be unmanageable or fall with intolerable weight upon our people.

GEN. The General Assembly of Georgia has agreed to hold an adjourned session, on the fourth Wednesday in April next. The reason assigned for it is that Congress will probably levy a war tax, and it will be necessary for the Legislature to provide for its payment.

[illegible] Nothing was heard from the gunboats on yesterday. Thursday, we hear them went up Yazoo, and when nearly opposite Mr. Blake's place came in contact with a couple of torpedoes, which exploded, without doing any damage, however. The boats then fired four shots and immediately withdrew.

[illegible] The proprietors of the Memphis Appeal announce that they will commence the publication of their paper in Jackson in a few days.

THE GUERILLA CHIEF.

[A BALLAD.]

BY ALBERT ROBERTS.

Now jingle, jingle, jingle,
Go the spurs upon his heels—
As thro' the forest-brake
Upon the cunning foe he steals—
And as he rides—he plans—
While he gathers up his clans,
For a dash upon the vandal and invader,

And clatter, clatter, clatter,
Go the hoofs upon the road
Of his fiery, mettled charger—
By as mettled charger rode,
And his merry bugle skrill
Echoes back from hill to hill,
For his men to follow on the fell invader:

Now rattle, rattle, rattle,
Go their rifles in reply
To the challenge of the Yankees
Who defy them out to die;
On the left and on the right
All his men dismount to fight— [valds.
And they fall upon the thunder-stri[illegible]

And whistle, whistle, whistle,
Go the balls about the ears
Of the dashing Guerilla—
But a charmed life he wears—
Till at length, their muskets cease,
And the Yankees sue for peace— [ders.
With a promise, never more to be inva-

Now jingle, jingle, jingle
Go the spurs upon his heels
As back thro' forest-brake
Upon another chase he steals—
But this time with Cupid's dart
He attacks a woman's heart—
And in Hearts-ville makes his peace with the invaders.
