CHATTANOOGA:

THURSDAY MORNING, JAN. 15, 1863.

THE SITUATION.

There is no news of consequence from the front to-day. Our telegraphic columns will be found to be full, and interesting.

Among the reviewers and magazinists of Great Britain, the "condition of the country" is at all times a fruitful theme of invective or panegyric. To run the eye over the pages of Blackwood and the "Quarterlies," these last forty years, one would imagine from the tone of one that the Empire was on its last legs, from another that its glory was only beginning, when in reality the most commonplace and inoffensive topics of politics were the faggots that set the great cauldron boiling. It is quite different with us. When we speak of the "condition of the country" we allude to a case of life and death, we treat of an infant nation and young people, struggling through the throes, perils and convulsions of revolution for existence, and there is meaning and portentous meaning, too, when we weep or when we laugh. At times we have practiced a little of both; sometimes we have only sighed, and again we have kept the rational equanimity. Never, perhaps, have we had more reason to feel a placid satisfaction at the "condition of the country" than at the present moment. Times go bravely with us. Compare to-day with the gloomy period succeeding the fall of Donelson, the capture successively of Nashville, Memphis and New Orleans, the apprehended danger of Richmond; one can scarce recognize a resembling feature. In Virginia, where our "cardinal points" were all beleaguered we are entirely relieved, and our soldiers are quietly resting on their arms and smoking the best Killikinic. In Tennessee we have the enemy for the moment at bay, and our cavalry constantly keeps him in terror, buzzing about Nashville like stinging bees, and dashing into the heart of Memphis with a whoop and a yell. On the Mississippi our guns are unsilenced, and we hold the Father of Waters, like a great Samson, between ourselves and the foe. Out in Texas Magruder woos and wins the Harriet Lane, like a flash, and opens the eyes of the sutlers in that region in a marvellous manner. Beauregard and Buckner defend the coast superbly. The Yankee "anaconda" has been cut in so many places and bleeds from so many gashes that it can neither twist nor wriggle but it displays its weakness and inefficiency. The "condition of the country" is prosperous. We are more than a year in advance of the "situation" this time twelve months ago. The signs of the times bear up our hopes, "like little wanton boys that swim on bladders," and we have only to strike out boldly and fearlessly, quick licks and vigorous, to reach the shore of independence and peace.

☞ The Winchester Tenn. Bulletin says the gallant Basil Duke, was wounded in Morgan's last expedition. He was shot in the head while leading his men. He was brought across the river by his men, and refusing to remain behind, was brought on in a carriage.

☞ On Sunday last, a negro boy belonging to Col. J. M. C. Read, was dreadfully mangled by the explosion of a shell on or near that gentleman's farm near Atlanta, Ga.

☞ It is said that the Cincinnati gamblers who won $53,639 from Major I. N. Cook, the defaulting Paymaster, have agreed to pay over that amount to the Government, and upon that condition they are to be released from custody.

☞ The Louisville Journal of the 7th inst., says "there is an order in existence which prohibits the shipment of all goods to Nashville, on private account without special permission from Gen. Rosecrans, the commander of the Department."

☞ Gen. Grant's order expelling Israelites from his department has been rescinded by the President of the Yankee nation.

☞ In Louisville, the rate of discount upon Tennessee money remains at 5 per cent for the notes of the old banks.

☞ At the close of his message Lincoln says "we cannot escape History.", If he takes the field, he will discover that "we cannot escape Bob Lee," either.

☞ Mr. J. B. Neathery has become associated with the Daily Progress as Assistant Editor.

BY GRAPE-VINE AND OTHERWISE.

ON DITS OF THE DAY.

CHATTANOOGA.....Tuesday Evening, 8 P. M.

Again the Grapevine dreameth!

Morpheus caught me in his arms athwart the Printer's imposing stone, where I lay, a form "scarce half made up," and dreamed that I was, again—

IN NASHVILLE!

The gas lights twinkled as of yore upon many a well-known corner. I drew my beaver brim fiercely down upon my brows and stalked into the den of Riddleberger, and hastily swallowed a "dozen briled," and a quart of "alf and alf." Thence into the street, defiant of Yankeedom, but a little uneasy lest my disguise should be seen through and the operator arrested.

Click! click! click!

I looked up. The noise seemed to proceed from two lighted windows in La Rue Deadericke. Curiosity led me through a dark passage, up a flight of stairs—into a game of Pharash! The noise not now a mystery:—Click! click! click! went a number of checks of ivory. "All reedy" said a "heavy swell," behind a silver "two-carder," frills in his bosom—diamonds in his frills.

I threw a Confederate "Twenty" on the table. The whole company started. "Where did you get that young man?" said a Dutchy looking officer in blue undress. "In Richmond," I said. A fellow on my left nudged me, and whispered:—"That's Gen. Rosecrans—mind what you say." "That is," I said, correcting myself—"I got it from a fellow who come from Richmond."

"All right," said the Tiger, "here's yer checks."

Suddenly I was gifted with a faculty of seeing right thro' the dealer's box. The "card on top," appeared lost in a haze while the one beneath, invisible to all the other players, revealed itself to me with unerring certainty. I felt that I possessed a secret worth a dozen magnificent fortunes. To satisfy yself that it was a reality I placed my twenty "chips" upon the "ten" and "coppered," and the next turn witnessed the "ten spot" leap from the box, and the Tiger "sucked" another "Twenty" beside the original investment.

In half an hour, I was possessor of half the bank and still winning. Gen. Rosecrans quit the game in disgust and I afterwards learned that he was "in" with the dealer. Presently Andy Johnson came in. He did not recognize me. He was evidently intoxicated. Dealer gave him a wink and got up. Andy took his seat and commenced sluing "the papes." I broke him the first deal. Handed in my checks and drew out every green-back he had in the world. The crowd looked on in admiration. I rolled the bills up in an elongated strip—set fire to them in the gas-light—lit my cigar, and puffed the smoke in Andy's face.

"Who the hell are you?" he said. "Me?" I replied, "I'm chief Jonny from the Lake, and special telegraphic correspondent of the Grapevine in La ville de Chattanooge."

"Thou lest fiend!" shrieked Andy. Whereupon I wrenched a leg off the end of a billiard table and struck at him so violently I fell off the table and woke up. Half a dozen "specials" of the Rebel crowded round me. "Hallo, Grap-cy!" said one lavent, you heard the news? Then they began to tell it me, and I printed as they spoke:—

On dit: That Joe Johnston takes immediate command of the army on Duck River, and that Gen. Bragg will be sustained by the authorities at Richmond, in his recent "fall back."

Another about a "cool-handed rebel," who was captured at Murfreesboro—a Tennessee ah.

"Tennessee had been in the trenches three whole nights and began to experience the knawings of hunger, and his stomach was hollow enough for a ventriloquist. Poking about over the field in quest of Yankee biscuit, he got lost and wandered off into the Yankee lines. A Federal "brought him to a stand" with his bayonet, and then proceeded to march him off to the camp. Just then the two got in range of a heavy musketry fire, and Yankee lay down.

"What," said Tennessee, "you haint afeared air ye?"

"Yes!" was the reply—"lie down or yeou'll got your head shot off."

Tennessee made a feint to lie down, but suddenly threw himself upon his captor, and give him a hearty lambasting, in the midst of a perfect rain of bullets. Yankee shouted murder and Tennessee let him up, and seized the gun.

"Now," said he—"you are my prisoner—double-quick to the rear."

And he marched him off at a dog-trot and brought his prisoner safe to Murfreesboro.

I find on my table a copy of the Nashville Union of the 9th inst., from which I extract the following:—

"The steamers Charter, John A. Fisher, and M. V. Baird, all in the employ of the Government, arrived from Clarksville yesterday, with large supplies for the army."

The Union says the Cumberland is falling with 3½ feet water on the shoals of Harpeth.

The Wood Sisters are playing at the Nashville Theatre.

Nearly the whole of the "city of Rocks" is converted into a hospital. Among other buildings thus appropriated, are the University Building on College Hill, old Gun Factory, Ensley Building on the Square, Howard High School College Street between Church and Broad, Masonic Hall, Medical College, Broadway Hotel, Hume High School, the "Old Female Academy" of Dr. Elliott, Gordon Block and a number of others. It will take half a century to rid Nashville of the odor of Abolitiondom.

☞ We have had frequent complaints of late verbal and written, concerning the large number of stragglers from our army. Many of these stragglers, we are informed, taking advantage of the general confusion attendant upon a retreat of the army, have straggled away from their commands to lounge about the hotels and groceries of the first neighboring town in their line of "travel." Chattanooga has been blessed with these fellows for several days past. It appears that stragglers have even reached as far as Montgomery.—Our contemporary of the Mail, commenting upon the evil, very pertinently asks, "how do these men get home, and why are they countenanced in remaining, when their services are imperiously demanded in the field? They should be denounced, and reported to the officers who have been detached from the army to drum them up. Are our local authorities asleep, that they take no action in this business? It is impossible that the officers of the army can hunt out these recreants from duty and honor, and it should be made the duty of the magistrates to apprehend and imprison all the men who have basely deserted their flags.

☞ The following order appears in the Nashville papers:

OFFICE CHIEF OF POLICE,
Fourteenth Army Corps, Dep't Cumberland,
Nashville, Dec. 30, 1862.

Notice is hereby given to all citizens of Nashville, and of Davidson county, who have by word or deed, aided and abetted the present rebellion, to come forward forthwith to this office, and make bond and oath, according to the forms provided and heretofore published by military authority.
