MRS. WETMORE'S SUICIDE.

A PLAIN STATEMENT FROM THE LIPS OF LADY PELHAM CLINTON.

The Promises of Lord Anglesey—His Love Letters—The Last Interview—A Broken-Hearted Woman—No Cause of Action—The Grave in the Stranger's Cemetery.

By cable to the Cincinnati Commercial.

PARIS, July 24.—The Wetmore-Anglesey affair continues to engross public attention, and although it is the general theme of conversation here, it is curious to say that, with a single exception—that of the Voltaire this morning—all mention of it has been kept out of the newspapers. All sorts of rumors are current in connection with this fact, which, for the honor of the profession, I shall avoid noticing. I prefer to set it down to the prudent reserve which the French press is always known to practise on such delicate occasions.

Having been introduced to Lady Albert Pelham Clinton at the house of a mutual friend, I have profited by my slight acquaintance to obtain some information regarding the melancholy affair. Her ladyship received me courteously, and expressed her willingness to tell me all she knew of the circumstances. She herself seemed overcome with grief, and her eyes filled with tears when she began to speak about her deceased friend. After a few general remarks about the rumors that were in circulation, I told her what I had stated in my telegram of Thursday evening, and which she pronounced to be in the main correct.

"May I ask," I said, "if you are in possession of Lord Anglesey's letters to Mrs. Wetmore?"

"No," she replied; "they are in the hands of her lawyer, Mr. Gardener of the Champs Elysées. They are all couched in terms which convey the idea that his lordship had the most passionate affection for Mrs. Wetmore, and in no less than seven of them he declared that he would marry her the moment she got the divorce from her husband. I have evidence in my possession a ring which he gave her in the first days of last month." (Her ladyship here went and brought in a small basket containing, among other effects of the deceased, a lady's plain gold ring bearing the following inscription on the inside: "To Annie from Anglesey, June 1, 1890.")

Lady Albert Clinton then continued, "Mrs. Wetmore came to Europe about three years ago with her son, a lad about 13 years of age. I think she met Lord Anglesey for the first time in Spain. When she left America she had no idea of permanently separating herself from her husband, of whom she always spoke with remorse, but Lord Anglesey turned her head by promising to marry her if she got a divorce. This took so much time that he got tired of his bargain, and deserted her as soon as she had broken loose from the only real tie which bound her to life—affection for her child. She was a handsome, affectionate and confiding poor dear. She was so faithful to Lord Anglesey, and believed in him so entirely. You know they lived on the Avenue Kleber—occupying separate apartments in the same house. Three days before her death she said, speaking of her husband:

"William was always kind to me, but we had nothing in common. We were not made to live happily together. He was much too religious for me, and I was not satisfied unless I went to church all day Sunday. But he was a good, kind man. I never ought to have left him. My fate should be a warning to American women who come abroad without their legitimate protectors.'

"But she rarely gave expression to these remorseful feelings, for she loved Anglesey to distraction. Her last meeting with him was on Sunday, June 29. He told her he had to go to London on business. She said to him with a sort of instinctive feeling, 'You will be true to me, Henry, and come back as quickly as you can?'

"He replied that he loved her as much as ever, and parted with her with every demonstration of affection, although he knew he had written her a letter dated the 19th (the day before), in which he bade her farewell forever, and gave her to understand that all was at an end between them. This letter was handed to her the next day by Mr. Stone, Lord Anglesey's Secretary, and it drove her almost to madness. It was then that I brought her to my house, for she had no friends here. And in the letter to which I have just referred Lord Anglesey gave her to understand that she must leave her apartments and write no more than one letter to him. To this she wrote a reply of almost touching character, in which she appealed to his lordship's manhood.

"Remember,' she said, 'all I have lost for you. Can you expect that God will prosper you or yours, when you are capable of such a dreadful wrong?" In another passage she says:

"Can it be possible that you have a conscience or feeling, or that you, a nobleman, are willing to turn me out penniless into the world after all your promises, to say nothing of your pretended affection up to the week before your marriage?"

I was next shown a number of letters from Lord Anglesey, authenticated by his family coat of arms. They were all couched in the most endearing terms, commencing with "My Lovely Anna," "My Dearest," and closing with extravagant assurances of undying love, esteem and fidelity. Seven of these letters, Lady Clinton said, and as Mrs. Wetmore's lawyer assured me, contain explicit and unequivocal promises of marriage, and cover a period of nearly three years. When it was announced that the Marquis had married Mrs. Rodehouse, Mrs. Wetmore's lawyer, who knew all the circumstances, urged that a suit for breach of promise should be instituted. A correspondence to that effect was commenced with the Marquis's lawyers, who replied that their client repudiated the allegation as to the promise, and that it would be useless to try and make a case, as there was no law punishing breach of promise in France, and that an offence committed there could not be tried England. Unhappily, this proved to be the case.

The deceased took no interest in all this, the idea of death engrossing her mind from the moment she heard of Lord Anglesey's marriage. Every effort made to cheer her was vain, and she paced up and down her room the image of despair. This lasted until Wednesday morning, when on entering her apartment Lady Albert Clinton found her in the last agony, with eyes glaring, hands clenched, and face so distorted that she was hardly recognizable. The servants were immediately sent for medical aid, but it was 10 o'clock before a doctor could be found. Every effort was then made to save the poor sufferer, but in vain. She writhed in dreadful torture until about 3, when she breathed her last.

When the Marquis heard of the melancholy event, he sent word through his lawyer that he would contribute £50 toward the expenses of the funeral. The burial lot alone at St. Germaine cost £40.

The deceased was a lady of refined and pleasing manners. She was of medium height, with dark eyes and hair. Her features had something of the Jewish cast, and she was graceful and attractive, with especially pretty hands and feet, and her figure was faultless. She was kind and amiable to an extreme, and of sweet and forbearing disposition, her only fault being, as Lady Albert Clinton said, that she "loved not wisely, but too well."

The funeral services took place this morning at the Protestant Episcopal Church in the Rue Bayard. Dr. Morgan officiated. The attendance was very small, there being only about a dozen persons, chiefly ladies, present. Among these were Lady Albert Clinton and Messrs. May and Henry Bacon Hunter of New York. Your correspondent and one or two others were the only gentlemen who attended. The services were impressively read by Dr. Bacon, and the choir chanted the anthems with unusually solemn effect. The few persons present, all of whom knew the deceased, were moved to tears. The coffin was then placed in the hearse and driven away to the St. Lazare Railway station, followed by Lady Albert Clinton and a lady friend. True to the last, they accompanied the remains to St. Germaine-en-Lay, where they were interred in the Strangers' Cemetery. The expenses of the funeral were mostly borne by Lady Clinton, whose conduct has been admirable throughout.

By the Associated Press.

LONDON, July 26.—The accounts of the cause of the recent death of Mrs. Annie Wetmore, an American lady in Paris, are conflicting. A Paris depatch says: "Mrs. Wetmore was 30 years old and of great personal beauty. She made the acquaintance of an Englishman of title who pressed her to obtain a divorce in order to marry him. She agreed to do so, and obtained a divorce; but just as she received the information that a decree in her favor had been granted she learned that the English lord was about to marry another woman. A stormy meeting took place between them, at which the lord offered her pecuniary indemnity. This final outrage rendered her disappointment unbearable, and she then poisoned herself."

The Paris Gaulois says: "Mrs. Wetmore died of congestion of the brain, and not by suicide."

The Scawanhaka Inquiry.

The committee of nine of the United States Grand Jury investigating the Scawanhaka disaster yesterday subpœnaed Messrs. Jayne and Matthews, inspectors of steam vessels. Those officials declined to be examined as witnesses by the grand jurors, on the ground that they had to sit as judges in the matter. Two experts in boilers testified before the committee.

Coroner Brady will begin the inquest in the case of the persons lost on the Scawanhaka to-morrow. He will meet his jury at the foot of East Twenty-sixth street at 10 A. M., whence they will proceed in a tug to the scene of the wreck. The examination of witnesses will be begun on Thursday.

The Narrow Escape of Two Children.

Early on Saturday morning, Mrs. Leveridge of 338 East Forty-eighth street, sent her daughter Mary, about 11 years old, to carry breakfast to her father, a bonesheoreman, who was working at the foot of East Fifty-first street. Margaret Murray, 11 years old, and Charles Murray, 7 years old, who live in the same house, went with the girl. At the river bank the boy, while trying to secure a piece of drift wood, fell into the swift current, and his sister, while trying to rescue him, also fell in. She caught her brother by the hair, and they sank twice before they were rescued by John Cook of 940 First avenue.

Court Calendars This Day.

IN MALE ATTIRE.

A Young French Girl's Unsuccessful Plan to Escape her Friends.

Ada Doriot, a pretty French girl, aged 16 years, was dressed in male clothes when brought before the Jefferson Market Police Court yesterday. She wore a blue suit that fitted neatly, she held a white straw hat in her hand, and her dark hair was cut short. She maintained a look of utter indifference to the court proceedings. By her side was another prisoner, Louis Ridau, a flashily-dressed Frenchman, with a blond moustache. The complainant was the mother of the girl, Mrs. Louis Doriot, the keeper of a lodging house at 212 Wooster street. She said that Ridau had enticed Ada away from her home three weeks ago.

Ridau had been in the habit of calling at the house until ordered away by Mr. Doriot. Four months ago Mr. Doriot died, and Ridau resumed his visits. Mrs. Doriot sought to drive him away, but he visited Ada clandestinely by a fire escape in the rear, until he prevailed on her to run away with him. He took her to live at 125 Waverley place. On Sunday evening she took a freak to dress in men's clothing, so that she might go out and escape recognition. Putting on a false moustache, she went out with Ridau. In Fourth street Ada met her sister, who at once recognized her in spite of the disguise. The sister called on Policeman McKenny, and he arrested the two.

Justice Kilbreth committed Ridau for trial, and sent Ida to the House of Refuge.

An Ex-Teller in Trouble.

Louis Fucot, Notary Public and Commissioner of Deeds, at 526 Broadway, was arraigned before Police Justice Duffy, yesterday, on the complaint of retaining money belonging to Miss Charlotte L. Owen, a music teacher, of 107 East Thirteenth street. Fucot was a teller in the defunct Sixpenny Savings Bank, in which Miss Owen had a deposit. In 1879 Miss Owen got a dividend of $100 from the receiver of the bank, she kept the money in her trunk for some time, as she feared to deposit it again. She met Fucot on Broadway one day, and he offered to invest the money in a Government bond for her. She handed him the money and took his receipt. Under various pretexts for delay Miss Owen avers, Fucot postponed getting the bond. She finally demanded the return of her money. He gave her $20. When she called again he said he had lost the money. Justice Duffy severely reprimanded Fucot and held him in $500 bail.

Death Sentence Commuted.

RICHMOND, Va., July 26.—The sentence of Nelson Mitchell, colored, who was to have been hanged next Friday in Amherst County for the murder of John C. Gillespie, has been commuted by Gov. Halliday to imprisonment for life in the penitentiary. The prisoner was first sentenced by the County Court of Amherst, which sentence was subsequently affirmed by the Circuit Court, and then by the Supreme Court of Appeals.
