To Those Whom We Have Addressed Before:

Some of you have come to see us; have verified all we ever said in print; have made your choice of pretty and useful things with which to adorn and equip your home, settled on satisfactory terms, and are now in the enjoyment of life such as you never knew before. Accept our hearty congratulations. Others have read what we have said, and doubted; at least, we have not seen their interesting faces. Must we say it again in larger type? To YOU, we mean; you who want a home so much, and yet haven't come to see on what terms we'll make one for you.

Yours, persistently,
