THE DAILY REBEL.

RAGS! RAGS!! RAGS!!!

We wish to purchase 500,000 pounds of clean cotton and linen rags for which we will pay the very highest price in cash. Persons collecting rags will do well to separate the white from the colored, as white rags will command higher prices than mixed ones.

Country merchants are requested to collect rags for us. Where any quantity is purchased at a point convenient for shipment, advise us of the fact and we will direct where they are to be shipped, and forward the money for them.

Address FRANC. M. PATT, Chattanooga, Tenn.

TUESDAY MORNING, APRIL 29, 1863.

Gen. Washington Barrow.

Some weeks ago we announced the death of this distinguished gentleman in Richmond. We are doubly gratified that we are going to recognize his presence in Chattanooga, and to welcome his return to Tennessee. It is a part of our duty—and a most agreeable one—to give vent to him a sense of the popular feeling of kindness, which is everywhere felt for himself, and of the general gratification, which his release from prison gives his fellow-citizens.

Gen. Barrow has been a resident of Northern Bastiles for more than a year. Arrested immediately upon the occupation of Nashville, he was conveyed, in st to Alleghany in Michigan and then to Fort Johnson in Illinois. He the leading member of the Convention, which arranged and closed the connection of Tennessee as a member of the Confederacy—as Chairman of the Military Committee of the State Senate—and within as a citizen of eminence, a politician of influential position, and a Southern man of ardent patriotism, he brought upon himself the peculiar malice of the federal authorities, and from no one more than from that knave of knaves, Andrew Johnson. The consequence was his prosecution, confinement, under the blackest disciplines, and a steady refusal to exchange him. Nothing after, to make any terms, alone, or compromise either his independence or his loyalty, he would perhaps have remained a prisoner to the close of the war, but for the interposition of the Confederate Government, and the neglect of "Gov." Johnson, whose attention happened to be for a time withdrawn or diverted to other things. Happily a combination of fortunate circumstances has restored him to the bosom of a large circle of friends, though not yet to that of home and family. We shall hope to rejoice seven fold thereat, when we recover Nashville.

Meanwhile, a hearty welcome to such of our land as we are enabled to welcome him upon—whether as givers of good gifts, or as dispensers of hospitality, the people of the South and of Tennessee are always ready to reward the just, and to greet the generous.

Comrades on Crutches.

Hardly a day passes that we do not meet, as we move along our way of life, some familiar face, smiling at us above a pair of crutches. It is an old comrade of some other camp come to life again with these extra wooden legs on his, that remind us of the stile we used together when we were boys. Poor fellow! he will never be what he was in the old days, and it is painful to think what he is now. How we should like to recall a dozen years or more—for his sake, that we might play for a single game of leap frog or foot ball!

Crutches! They become the best of walking companions. We tried them once—in our extremely juvenile days, for a brief and sudden time—and found them dreadfully uncomfortable. They crave under the elbows, chafe the flesh, and the eternal chafing on the pavement makes discord to the musical sense and wearies one. And yet how patiently our wounded friend wears them—how affectionately he hugs them to him—how he leans upon them, like some kind of a friend, lending feeble, whole the knees bend, but still a cheerful and hopeful mind. On these crutches he has many a history; in each one perhaps of a whole battle; and although he is too brave, and has been too chivalric "to weep over his wounds, or tales of sorrow done," he is always ready to "shoulder his crutch and show how fields were won." Thus we gather round our friend on crutches and listen, while we pity and admire.

Only the other day we went to the room of an acquaintance, who had once graced a gallant company of a crack regiment, but is now, unhappily, out of the service. As we approached, an unusual hum of voices came out of the door and met us half way up the stair. We paused to listen, caring as little to encounter of a wine party as a dispute. The sounds were evidently not in anger, nor yet in hilarity. Rather the sober good nature of a group of friends, which flowed forth like a summer brook. Reassured, we entered. The room was quite full of men—of soldiers—ranged in a circle, and sitting upon the floor. It was strange, we thought hurriedly, when, seeing a new comer, they rose, and every one on crutches! There they stood—some emaciated by long confinement—some pale as wax—some weak and worn, bruised, maimed, mutilated—but all full of fire, spirit and pluck! The sight was a little too much for the particular chord it struck in our hearts, and if two larger drops than usual broke down one cheek upon a race toward our lip, it was no fault of ours.

Thus we go. To-day we meet our comrade for we could not help it! We bowed our head humbly, and slipped away in silence.

on his crutch, to-morrow it may be our turn. Such is war. Glory must pay its debts, like nature, trade, and everything else. At health to them, these men with extra legs! May Heaven be as open to them as the Valhalla cloisters for the ever-living dead!

The Circuit Court of the dis-United States for the Nashville Judicial Circuit, Judge Catron, and associate Judge Trigg, on the bench, met in that city yesterday, a week ago.

FROM THE FRONT.

Special Correspondence of the Rebel:

CAMP HERRON, TENN., April 21st, 1863.

On Tuesday morning, about 10 o'clock, a courier reported at headquarters that the enemy were advancing in large force on the Manchester pike, and were within three miles of our Station. Col. Fober, Thompson, now acting Brigadier General, having portions of different regiments at his command, immediately despatched couriers to the different outposts. By 12 o'clock he had collected together a sufficient number to check the enemy's advance, and give him sufficient time to bring Col. Tommason, of the 23 Alabama Battalion, who soon hastened to our assistance. A portion of the command led by Col. Thompson, advanced within a short distance of the enemy, and made every preparation for an attack. The position selected was a desirable one, as we soon gained possession of a hill overlooking the enemy. We did not long meditate, as the time and place was a most propitious one. We found the generally enraged our men having every advantage in their position—leading and firing from behind trees. Heavy skirmishing was kept up until night fell. At intervals the firing continued during the night. At the dawn of day next morning, every preparation was made to receive the attack. And Col. Thompson, aided by Lieut. Winders, soon had our men placed in a proper position to give them battle. There was no further advance made upon the part of the enemy. Upon their right we could distinctly perceive busy couriers in bringing their army to bear upon us, and soon after ten o'clock their line was observed a movement indicating a retreat. They then opened their batteries on us, with shell and solid shot, but with no damage. Courier after courier soon came in announced the cavalry intelligence that the enemy were advancing in heavy force, consisting of 3,000 cavalry and as many of infantry. We had great apprehension that we would be surrounded, and cut off. At the hour, Col. Thompson promptly dispatched courier to Colonel Lillard and Major Wheeler, critical situation. A message was sent to be ready, as we had to engage the enemy in our front, and apprehended an attack in rear. The Col. made the best disposition of our small force to be in readiness to hold in check the enemy. While the enemy are engaging our small force, we should be liable to be in a position, which that would be the most dangerous. At one o'clock, commenced the fighting and firing by the rear guard of the retreating enemy, when we could see the cavalry, and a portion of the infantry, in the rear of the enemy, and in sight of the enemy. By the skillful management of our officers, we succeeded in getting our men in good order, and at two o'clock, each division commenced retreating the enemy at the same time, leaving them in a hot place. We believe we have killed and wounded a great many of the enemy, and have not lost a single man. At the dawn of day next morning, we had the pleasure of hearing the enemy attacking our rear guard, and we were in a short time thereafter informed that the enemy had succeeded in getting in our rear, and had captured a train of cars, and other stores, and also captured about 70 of our men at McMinnville. Understand the high loss of infantry sent to escort us, was the purpose of drawing our attention from that section, leaving Cornersville, Murfreesboro, Lebanon, &c. &c. A. P.

We have conversed with Captain Campbell, an intelligent officer of the Confederate service, who was a prisoner in the enemy's lines, and who left their lines so short a time ago, as the 5th of April. While a prisoner he saw the official report of the killed and wounded of the enemy at the battle of Murfreesboro, amounting to 12,500. Over 13,000 men left our rear towards Nashville on Wednesday's battle. This body came on Wednesday evening, and the rear reported as reinforcements, from the large renegades returning to the defilement of their degraded flags. If the attack on our rear had been kept up with vigor on the Wednesday evening above mentioned, or caught them again on the next day (Thursday) Capt. C. is of opinion that the enemy would have stampeded en masse.

He also informs us that the Captain of Bonaparte's Body Guard, deserted and went home. One Regiment attacked arms and swore they would not fight. The officers persuaded them, and promised them furloughs as soon as they desired to remain at home. The effect was most demoralizing upon the army generally. The common saying was, if they would receive furloughs, replied, "Very well—we never intend to return anyhow!"

Our informant believes that over one half of that army will go home in May and June, if they are afforded the "ghost of a chance."

We were pleased to meet on Saturday evening, Mr. J. S. Tunnelle, the indefatigable Superintendent. Of the Southern Press Association, en route for his home in Atlanta. Mr. S. has just returned from the Headquarters of the Army of Tennessee, and expresses himself highly gratified with the results of his interview with General Johnston and General Bragg, both of whom received him most cordially and proffered every assistance to the press through its energetic representative, in laying before the people of the Confederacy prompt intelligence from the seat of war. In a very short time, Mr. S. will have completed his system, and will have arranged, by means of regular "call hours" for "press" reports, to transmit the news from different points with much greater facility and regularity.

The patients in a Yankee hospital at Nashville, one day last week presented the chief surgeon with a watch chain. If he is as big a thief as his distinguished professional brother whose letter appears in this morning's Rebel, he is likely to have, one of these days a chain attached to him of a little coarser metal. And it will be attached to his ankle instead of his vest-button.

One of the Nashville editors says he saw a few days ago, the balance sheet of a transaction in cotton, covering four hundred and two bales. The net profits amounted to more than forty thousand dollars!

A lady just through from Louisville, reports that she saw a portion of Burnside's forces passing through Lexington from Louisville. They are evidently destined for the eastern portion of Kentucky.

The Yankees at Nashville had quite a fright the other day, on account of the neighborhood of the terrible "Rebels." The Union of last Tuesday says:—

Information was received here Sunday that a heavy force of rebel cavalry had appeared on the Charlotte Turnpike, some distance beyond the Federal pickets, and it was thought they might possibly contemplate a raid upon Nashville. Measures were promptly taken to give them a warm reception, should they venture upon an enterprise so reckless. The day and night, and yesterday passed away, but they did not make any demonstration. A number of their horses were captured and brought in. They appeared to be making their way to the river, probably with the intention of crossing and going into Kentucky. The rebel newsmongers were put in motion by the proximity of their allies, and were quite lively in their gossip. They, however, consoled us speedily as a draught of cherry cider soda. Of what advantage would it be to them for a raid to be made upon our city. Who would be the greatest sufferers, they or the Federal Army, in case the rebel cavalry should succeed in getting into Nashville? Beware, you sleep upon a volcano.

Within the past twelve months Nashville has lost many valuable citizens, who have sought peace and quiet farther North. We are sorry to state that the exodus continues. The heat of the approaching summer, high prices of living, the scarcity of supplies of provisions, and the stagnation of trade, are things which few have the philosophy to contemplate with composure.—Nashville (Abolition) Union.

The exodus of young army of negro-stealers will be worse than last when "our Joe" advances. The heat of Southern muskitoes, the high price of English bayonets, the scarcity of logs to hide behind, the fierceness of Southern minie balls, are things which few Yankee soldiers have the philosophy to contemplate with composure.

A correspondent of the Richmond Sentinel says a young lady in Winchester, Va., went to Milroy to get a permit to buy forage for her father's cows when the General said:

"Are you loyal?"

"Yes," she replied.

"Here is the permit.

"To the United States in the Confederate States:

"To the Confederacy, of course," she replied.

"Then I shall stop the permit. This infamous rebellion must be crushed."

"Well, sir," said she, "I hope you may succeed. By the way, Mr. Arnold's old cow, sir, is dead to you!"

The senior partner has associated Mr. P. H. Dillard with him in his GENERAL COMMISSION HOUSE, at the old stand of Staples & Anderson, and solicits consignments of Sugar, Molasses, Cotton Merchandise and Produce generally. To sell produce at highest market rates—attend in person to weights and delivery, and send account sales and checks at once, is the old established rule of this House. It has answered an extended patronage which 30 years' experience and this market, and our present increased facilities, prepares us to meet with our usual promptness.
