CHATTANOOGA DAILY REBEL.

VOLUME 1. WEDNESDAY MORNING, JUNE 17, 1863. NUMBER 260.

THE DAILY REBEL

WEDNESDAY MORNING, JUNE 17, 1863.

[illegible]

The Chicago Times [illegible] the suppression of the Chicago Times [illegible] the mode of suppression [illegible] of that city, by order of Gen. Burnside [illegible] order, was shot [illegible] coln.) After [illegible] the United [illegible] Post says:

[illegible] orders, and the [illegible] for publication [illegible] how the office [illegible] reasons of the [illegible] era of the paper [illegible] speedily raised [illegible] citement on the [illegible] journal was investigated [illegible] and were threats [illegible] open the [illegible] paper should [illegible] ers proceeded to [illegible] the civil [illegible] an appeal [illegible] temporary [illegible] Thomas Drum [illegible] and was served upon the [illegible]

Upon the service [illegible] informed the officer of their purpose [illegible] a paper in his [illegible] proceeded to Camp Douglas [illegible] purpose to bring a sufficient military force to carry out the orders of the superior [illegible] Soon after [illegible] the publication [illegible] number of infantry scouts in the camp with instructions to concentrate and march with information of the first movement of the military toward the office. The [illegible] two o'clock in the morning [illegible] the military were on the [illegible] The paper was quickly put to press [illegible] the establishment were locked and the [illegible] was run at its highest speed to get as many copies as possible before the [illegible] should arrive. Probably [illegible] were thus worked off, the only [illegible] received their mail [illegible] a considerable portion of the mail copies were [illegible] postoffice, the postmaster having received instructions not to forward them through the mails.

About half past two o'clock the troops from Camp Douglas arrived in front of the building in which the paper was printed. They found the doors locked, but [illegible] possession of the place. [illegible] of the paper which had not been [illegible] the establishment, and piled [illegible] in the mailing room. These letters stood in the morning.

Early Wednesday morning the excitement of the preceding night became known, and several hundred persons collected about the office and so blockaded up that portion of Randolph street that a force of police [illegible] to clear the sidewalk. Many persons in the crowd were interested