INCEPTIONS OF DREAMS.

Examples of Disease Preceded by Strange Fancies that Come in Sleep.

The Senses During Slumber Often Reflections of Coming Trouble.

Impressions Upon the Senses Frequently the Starting Points of What Follows in Dreamland.

[Written for the HELENA INDEPENDENT.]

IMPRESSIONS MADE UPON THE senses are frequently the starting points of dreams, but though all nations have, to a greater or less extent, in all ages of the world, believed in the prophetic nature of dreams, we know now that the relation, instead of being one of prophecy and fulfilment, is simply that of cause and effect. Very slight impressions made upon the senses during sleep are exaggerated by the partially awakened brain.

The first evidence of approaching paralysis may be a very minute degree of numbness, so minute that the brain, when awake and engaged with the busy thoughts of active life, fails to appreciate it. During sleep, however, the brain is quiescent, till some exciting cause sets in uncontrollable action, and dreaming results. Such a cause may be the incipient numbness of a limb. A dream of its being turned into stone, or cut off, or violently struck, is the consequence. The disease goes on developing and soon makes its presence unmistakable.

For several years past I have made inquiries of patients and others relative to their dreams, and have thus collected a large amount of material bearing upon the subject. With reference to the point under consideration, the data in my possession are exceedingly important and interesting. Among the cases which have thus come under my observation of diseases being preceded by morbid dreams are the following:—

A gentleman, two days before an attack of hemiplegia, dreamed that he was cut in two exactly down the mesial line from the chin to the perineum. By some means union of the two divided surfaces was obtained, but he could only move to one side. On awakening a little numbness existed in the side which he had dreamed was paralyzed. This soon passed off and ceased to engage his attention. The following night he had a somewhat similar dream, and the next day, toward evening, was seized with the attack which rendered him hemiplegic.

Another dreamed one night that a man dressed in black and wearing a black mask came to him and struck him violently on the leg. He experienced no pain, however, and the man continued to beat him. In the morning he felt nothing, with the exception of a slight headache. Nothing unusual was observed about the leg, and all went well until, on the fifth day, he had an apoplectic attack, accompanied with hemiplegia, including the leg which he had in his dream imagined to have been struck.

A lady aged forty, who had been a great sufferer from rheumatism for many years, dreamed one afternoon while sitting in her chair in front of the fire that a boy threw a stone at her, which, striking her on the face, inflicted a very serious injury. The next day violent inflammation of the tissues around the facial nerve as it emerges from the stylo-mastoid foramen set in and paralysis of the nerve followed, due to effusion of the serum, thickening, and consequent pressure.

A young lady dreamed that she was seized by robbers and compelled to swallow melted lead. In the morning she felt as well as usual, but toward the middle of the day was attacked with severe tonsilitis.

A young man informed me that a day or two before being attacked with acute meningitis he had dreamed that he was seized by banditti while traveling in Spain, and that they had taken his hair out by the roots, causing him great pain.

A lady of decided good sense had an epileptic seizure which was preceded by a singular dream. She had gone to bed feeling somewhat fatigued with the labors of the day, which had consisted in attending three or four morning receptions, winding up with a dinner party. She had scarcely fallen asleep when she dreamed that an old man clothed in black approached her, holding an iron crown of great weight in his hands. As he came nearer she perceived that it was her father, who had been dead several years, but whose features she distinctly recollected. Holding the crown at arm's length he said:

"My daughter, during my lifetime I was forced to wear this crown. Death relieved me of the burden, but it now descends to you."

Saying which he placed the crown on her head and disappeared gradually from her sight. Immediately she felt a great weight and an intense feeling of constriction in her head. To add to her distress she imagined that the rim of the crown was studded on the inside with sharp points, which wounded her forehead so that the blood streamed down her face. She awoke with agitation, excited, but felt nothing uncomfortable. Looking at the clock on the mantel-piece she found that she had been in bed exactly thirty-five minutes. She returned to bed and soon fell asleep, but was again awakened by a similar dream. On this occasion the apparition reproached her for not being willing to wear the crown. She had been in bed this last time over three hours before awaking. Again she fell asleep and again at broad day-light she was awakened by a like dream.

She now got up, took a bath and proceeded to cross herself with her maid's assistance. Recalling the particulars of her dream she recollected that she had heard her father say one day that in his youth, while being in England, his native country, he had been subject to epileptic convulsions, consequent on a fall from a tree, and that he had been cured by having the operation of trephining performed by a distinguished London surgeon.

Though by no means superstitious, the dreams made a deep impression upon her, and her sister entering the room at the time she proceeded to detail them to her. While thus engaged she suddenly gave a loud scream, became unconscious and fell upon the floor in a true epileptic convulsion. This paroxysm was not a severe one. It was followed in about a week by another, and, strange to say, this was preceded as the other by a dream of her father placing an iron crown on her head and of pain being thereby produced. Since then several months have elapsed and she has had no other attack, owing to the influence of the bromide of potassium which she continues to take.

In the case of a gentleman formerly under my treatment for epilepsy the fits are invariably preceded by dreams of difficulties of the head, such as decapitation, hanging, perforation with an augur, etc.

A lady, previous to an attack of sciatica, dreamed that she had caught her foot in a spring trap and that before she could be freed it was necessary to amputate the member. The operation was performed, but as she was released a large dog sprang at her and fastened his teeth in her thigh. She screamed aloud and awoke in her terror. Nothing unusual was perceived about the leg, but upon getting up in the morning there was slight pain along the course of the sciatic nerve, and this, before evening, was developed into well marked sciatica.

It would be very easy to pursue the subject further, but enough has been said to show that the so-called "prophetic dreams," like all others, have their origin either in impressions made upon some one or more of the special senses or in recollections of previous impressions. We are therefore obliged to dismiss, as without any foundation in fact, the notion that dreams have anything of the nature of true prophecy about them. As to other alleged extraordinary dreams, such as those indicating the occurrence of events of which the person has no actual knowledge, I can only say that without denying the possibility of such occurrences, they have not yet been shown to be real. As I have said before in other relations there is nothing impossible outside the domain of mathematics, but there are a great many things apparently possible which have not yet been satisfactorily established, and until proven it is wait to hold our acceptance of their reality in abeyance.

The state of Montana sends greetings to the above named defendant:

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaintiff in the district court of the First judicial district of the state of Montana, in and for the county of Lewis and Clarke, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this summons, if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, but in this district, within twenty days, otherwise within forty days, or judgment by default will be taken against you according to the prayer of said complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this court for the foreclosure of a certain mortgage, described in the complaint, and executed by the said Andrew N. Patton on the 22d day of June, 1890, to secure the payment of two certain promissory notes made by him to the plaintiff on the same day, which said notes were for the sum of six thousand dollars each, lawful money of the United States, described in the complaint herein, and which, by the non-payment of the first of said promissory notes, when due, and the interest of the second of said promissory notes, has become due, and alleging that there is due upon said promissory notes the sum of eleven thousand nine hundred and seventy-five and 72-100 ($11,975.72) dollars, and which sum is due, and the sum of $353.40 for taxes, with interest at the rate of ten per cent per annum from the 10th day of January, 1892. Also for the sum of $300, counsel fees to be fixed and allowed by the court, and for costs of suit herein expended; that the premises conveyed by said mortgage may be sold and the proceeds thereof applied to the payment of said notes, moneys expended by plaintiff as aforesaid, counsel fees and costs of suit. For further particulars reference to the complaint on file is hereby made, and in case such proceeds are not sufficient to pay the same, then to obtain an execution against the said Andrew N. Patton for the balance remaining due, and also that the above named defendants, and all persons claiming by, through, or under them, may be barred and forever foreclosed of all right, title, claim, lien, equity of redemption, and interest in and to the said mortgaged premises, and further and other relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will take default against you and apply to the court for the relief demanded in the said complaint.
