Description of This Ideal $6,500 Suburban Home

The ceiling of the porch should also have a sand finish.

An underflooring should be laid throughout the first and second floors, of matched soft wood ⅞ inch thick. The boards should not be over 6 inches in width and laid diagonally.

A quarter sawed "riff" Georgia pine flooring should be laid throughout the first floor, but in the second and third floors a first quality of similar pine flooring may be used, laid over a good quality deadening felt. All floors stained, filled, shellaced, and waxed, excepting in the kitchen, and adjoining rooms, where they may be simply oiled.

The bathroom floors should be of vitrified tile, a glazed sanitary cove tile base at the walls, tile plinths at the doors, and white marble saddles. The walls may be of Keenes' cement, or of decorators' canvas applied to the plaster, to a height of four feet, and painted with enamel paint. The house should be heated with a single warm air heater, the registers in the main rooms on the first floor to have bronze faces, set in the floor. Elsewhere they may be of white enamel and set in the walls, and all to be of plain lattice pattern.

In the kitchen there will be a single oven portable range, set on a hearth of cement. A sixty-gallon circulating hot-water boiler should be cemented to the water back with copper or brass pipe, which should have no joints in it to prevent the proper and easy flow and return of water. There should be a hose bibb at each end of the building, for the convenient connection of garden hose.

AS TO the plumbing fixtures, which are all indicated on the plans, the bathtubs and wash basins may be of enameled iron, with nickel plated fittings. The kitchen sink will be of galvanized iron, and the pantry sink of planished copper, with a carpenter's drain board. The disposal of the sewage will of course depend upon the conditions, as to whether a cesspool must be used, or connection can be made with a street sewer.

Basswood or similar inexpensive wood may be used for all the interior woodwork, excepting in the service portion where cypress may be used. The main rooms on the first floor should have a moulded door and window trim, not over 3½ inches wide. There will be a simple wood panel over the doors, as shown on the drawing of the living room, and a moulded narrow dado cap and base. The mantels should be of cement, excepting the shelfs which may be of wood, and the hearths may be of hard red brick laid in cement.

The door and window trim in all other rooms may be perfectly plain. A picture mould will be used in all the principal rooms, and in the bedrooms should be about 2 inches below the ceiling. All of the interior wood finish should be painted with three coats of paint, excepting in the kitchen where it may be stained and varnished. The treads of the main stairway should be of oak, stained, filled and shellaced. Outside the house, all sash, cornices, trellises, blinds and other wood work should be painted white, the blinds to be of a slightly darker or greyer tone. All casement sash should be hung on solid brass hinges, and have adjustable fasteners at the sill, top and bottom bolts, and convenient fasteners at the meeting rails. All blinds will have bolts, hold-fasts and adjustable fasteners at the sill. The architect will of course be ready and willing to explain more clearly, if necessary, any questions which may arise in the minds of any prospective builders.

He Agreed Unanimously

SENATOR SIMMONS, of North Carolina, tells this story of a Southern lynching. "The festivities were at their height, and the object of the mob's vengeance was hanging to the limb of a tree with a fire built under him. The leader of the mob detected an ancient negro hidden in the near-by bushes and dragged him out. The trembling captive was brought close enough to see the grewsome sight, and the leader of the mob asked:

"'Now, nigger, you-all see that black man swingin' up there?'

"'Oh, yas, sah, 'deed I do, sah,' cried the negro.

"'An' you-all know why we done that?' queried the leader.

"'Oh, yas, sah,' said the colored man.

"'He got just what he deserved, didn't he?'

"'Boss,' replied the old negro, 'pears to me, sah, dat he got off mighty light.'"
