Notes of an Overland Journey to California.

NUMBER SIX.

April 28.—I could not go, better after time the one yesterday, so I took the 7:00 out the house. I would not have got that if it had not been for Holy, who spoke a little French, and endeavored to sell for me. I regret very much the necessity of parting with my watch, but it could not be helped, and I am thankful that I had one to sell, for I would have been in a pretty fix if I had not been had it. But, Halsey and myself took supper at the hotel this evening. Halsey's mind is very agreeable, yet I must acknowledge that it was very agreeable to me to be a class and see such a face and hear out of a class place, with a cloth on the table, and had common with yet not crying that off for out of a class class only that you have not to clean up the dishes after the class.

April 27.—I had that the 7:00 will leave early at out of that place and purchase what we want. It was cold morning that the clothes were cleaned, for so dry it is contemplated. I had my same shed this morning, having some needs made to go over you.

April 28.—Spent the day in making preparations for the road. Not Dressed, Halsey and myself were together from the road.

April 29.—A meeting of the Company was called for the choices of a captain and officers of the guard. A man by the name of Ford or of [illegible], was elected captain, and I was elected first officer of the guard—or which I do not which, for the latter are very arbitrary and unpleasant—serving as unfortunated out of mine.

April 30.—Made final preparations, and packed the wagons, ready for a start to morrow. Time will be early a party of us. Very cold morning. It was just seen the Colonel Ford thinks we have nothing to fear.

May 1.—We had nothing to do but get the last articles, and we were ready for the road. Not rode out and pack mules and we brought in Cordillo, and brought us, or rather our provisions, and baggages, at the very last moment when we had not to better conclusion over that to map which we have been [illegible] I made the bread I bought here, and the last cake for good [illegible] We started about 11 o'clock, [illegible] We [illegible] Gov. McNair, the owner of the wagons, was one with him, making in all fifty-three. We will be joined in a day or two by about eleven more from Oldtown, which will make one party strong enough for any emergency. I hear it is no longer for our own conveniences. We travelled about three miles and camped for the night in a branch of the Sacramento river.

May 2.—Took the road about 9 o'clock, and travelled about twenty-two miles, and camped on the banks of a branch. We passed over the place where Donner bought the body of Discomonte. I rode over the hills and visited the remains of the entrenchments and redoubts made by the Mexicans. They had a beautiful position, and ought to have cut the handfull of Americans all to pieces. My horse goes very well, and if he does not get a sore back, or break down, I will get along fairly. If I have got every few casualties in my project and no more will have to sell.

May 3.—Camp was roused at 4 o'clock, and at sunrise we were on our way. About 11 o'clock came to a barranda belonging to Don Trine, of the State of Chihuahua. It is quite a settlement, and has a very pretty church. We came about eight miles further and camped for the night, making about twenty five miles this day.

May 4.—Camp roused at the usual hour. About 9 o'clock camped for a few hours at the head of a lake, about fifty miles long and two wide. Filled our kegs with water and travelled on until 6 o'clock, p. m., and camped for the night—distance this day, about twenty five miles.

May 5.—I had scarcely been relieved from guard duty before camp roused, for we had camped on the open prairie without water for our animals, and was anxious to get to water before the sun got too warm. I stopped about three miles back from camp but coming to gather a few sticks of wood, the very often my camp where there is neither wood nor water), and left my haversack, containing my ammunition, pipe, tobacco, etc., and had to go back for it this morning before day, and did not catch up with the party until they got to water, some twelve miles, where we now have camped. After feeding and watering the animals we resumed our march, and travelled until after dark, and camped near a town called Cassalle—distance this day, about 30 miles.

May 6.—When we passed through the town this morning we tried to buy something to eat, but could get nothing; the place is visited by the Indians every day; they come and take what they want. We travelled until 8 o'clock, p. m., and camped at a spring—making eighty-five miles this day.

May 7.—Camp was roused at the usual hour (4 o'clock) and about noon we arrived at a place called Gallinas, where we camped until next day—making only fifteen miles this day. Gallinas is situated in a rich valley, and is quite a pretty little place.

May 8.—Took the road about 8 o'clock, and after travelling about twenty miles, we come to a waterhole where we stopped until the next morning.

May 9.—We arise on the march at sunrise, and after travelling over a beautiful valley for fifteen miles we camped on the banks of a very pretty little stream. I took a bath and felt very much refreshed. I was absolutely ashamed of myself when I saw how dirty I was. After resting a couple of hours we resumed our march, and about dark we camped near a village or ranche, called Pueblo, on the banks of a stream of the same name—distance this day, about thirty miles.

May 10.—Moved our camp about a mile on the other side of the ranche, and here we camp for the day, as there is some blacksmithing to be done to the wagons. This is a young mulatto, belonging to an American by the name of Frank. He is the smartest boy of a man by the name of McKnight, who was shot by Jim Jones at a spy some years ago by the Mexicans in Chihuahua, and remained there six years. After he was liberated he discovered a silver mine near this place, where he built some after the discovery of the mine. They have made a large fortune, and I believe they run two or three mills every year. There is some little excitement in town to-day, on account of some
