WOMAN'S RIGHTS.

A great deal of talk has been had of late about the Rights of Women, and the necessity of earnestly contending and protecting them. The Worcester Convention does not seem to have thrown much light upon the subject. But we do think that Mrs. Lucretia Mott, of Washington in the following verses, which we find in the Southern Press, has touched the thing to the right issue, exactly.—[N. Y. Express.

It is her right to watch beside
The bed of sickness and of pain,
And when the heart almost despairs,
To whisper hopes of health again.

Her right to make the hearth-stone glad,
With gentle words, and cheerful smiles;
And when man is with care opprest,
His wearied spirit to beguile.

It is her right to train her sons
So they may Senate chambers grace—
Thus is she with woe-begone crowned,
Thus if herself had filled the place.

It is her right to be admired—
By every generous, manly heart,
Where, with true dignity and grace,
She acts well a woman's part.

She hath a dearer right than this;
To be in one true heart enshrined—
Who, though the world may all forsake,
Will cherish still, and soothe kind.

And there is yet a higher right
Which she is to woman given;
'Tis here to teach the infant mind
The attributes divine which come from heaven.

What would she more than to perform
On earth life's holiest, weightiest right?
When she shall meet yonder fire
Near angels than those she was.
