SALES AT AUCTION.

HATS AT AUCTION.—WILMERDING & MOUNT will sell, on Wednesday next, 27th inst., at their auction room, No. 51 Beaver street, forty dozen gentlemen's silk hats, Beebe's style, manufactured expressly for city trade. To be sold by the single case.

HENRY H. LEEDS, AUCTIONEER.—WILLIAMS, Stephens & Williams's great annual sale of American and foreign paintings, at the National Academy of Design, No. 663 Broadway, opposite Bond street, on Wednesday, 27th; Thursday, 28th, and Friday, 29th inst. Messrs. Williams, Stephens & Williams beg leave to announce their first annual sale of paintings, by American and foreign artists of distinguished reputation, to include, among others, the works of Leutze, Durand, Huntington, Doughty, Cropsey, Gifford, Jones, Ranney, Beard, Peale, Ancell, Carter, Beard, Peale, Sidney, Perry, Rebran, &c., and to include a number of high cost paintings now in store. In announcing this sale, to which they confidently invite the attention of the public and purchasers from all parts of the United States, they propose to place before buyers a superior class of pictures, richly framed, which have only been attainable at private purchase, or by making up of gentlemen's galleries, and to present them from time to time a daguerreotype, as it were, of the state of modern art on this side of the Atlantic. While the co-operation of leading artists already secured is a guaranty of works which, in the ordinary course of purchase and sale, would rarely be open to the great body of connoisseurs, it is believed that the plan will so fully meet the wishes of buyers as at once to return to the artist benefits equal to those the public must derive from such an exposition. Catalogues will be ready, and the pictures exhibited as above, on and after the 13th inst.

JAMES COLE, AUCTIONEER.—PEREMPTORY SALE of valuable lots in the Seventh ward, Brooklyn, to close a concern.—James Cole will sell at auction, on Monday, October 25, at 12 o'clock, at the Merchants' Exchange, nineteen lots on Franklin avenue and Quincy street. Also, valuable houses and lots on Livingston street, Flock street, Hudson avenue, Willoughby street, and Pearsall street. Maps of the above property can be had at the offices of the auctioneer, 43 Fulton street, Brooklyn, or 9 Wall street, New York.

R. C. KEMP, AUCTIONEER.—ELEGANT FURNIture at auction, on Monday next, at 10½ o'clock, at the warerooms, 539 Broadway, between Spring and Prince streets.—R. C. Kemp will sell as above, a very large and valuable stock of first class cabinet furniture, which has been manufactured by one of our old established cabinet makers, in the best possible manner, for the Broadway custom trade, and being about to retire from business, will sell his entire stock, without any reserve, to close the concern. This stock comprises a very large and desirable assortment of rich rosewood, oak, mahogany, and black walnut parlor, library, dining room, and chamber furniture, such as is rarely offered at auction, and presents a very favorable opportunity to the housekeeper to supply themselves with very superior furniture at auction prices. The goods may be examined by catalogue the day before the sale, at the warerooms, 539 Broadway.

R. W. WESTCOTT, AUCTIONEER.—HOUSEHOLD furniture, on Monday, 10½ o'clock, at No. 146 Greenwich avenue, being all the stock of the late D. G. Hulse, custom made and of the best quality, consisting of mahogany and walnut bureaus, sofas, divans, sideboards, extension tables, Voltaire and rocking chairs in velvet and hair cloth, mahogany and walnut washstands, hat stands, marble top and plain centre sofa and side tables, dining, breakfast, and card tables, rosewood and walnut bedsteads, richly carved mahogany and rosewood chairs, cane and walnut chairs, walnut office and armchairs, inlaid fancy tables, wardrobes, fine hair mattresses, feather beds, superfine and ingrain carpets, mahogany and gilt mirrors, girandoles, rich vases, &c. Every lot, embracing over two hundred, will be peremptorily sold, rain or shine.

W. A. CARTER, AUCTIONEER.—AUCTION NOtice.—New grocery stock and fixtures, on Monday, October 25, at 10 o'clock, at the corner of Prince and Lawrens streets, being a fresh and new stock of choice family groceries, consisting of the usual assortment of teas, sugars, coffee, syrups, oil, &c. Also, horse, new wagon and harness, together with scales, tea and molasses cans, all new. Also, the lease of the store, at a very low rent. The sale will be positive, to the highest bidders.

MR. WEBSTER'S HEALTH.

THE LATEST NEWS FROM MARSHFIELD.

The Closing Moments of a Great Statesman.

THE FAREWELL OF RELATIVES AND FRIENDS, &c., &c., &c.

TELEGRAPHIC.

BOSTON, October 23—A. M.

The following is an account of the state of Mr. Webster during the night.

At eleven o'clock he was again seized with vomitings, though at this time they were slight

Between one and two o'clock this morning he was again attacked, and for three quarters of an hour suffered terribly. From that time to the date of our writing this (six and a half o'clock) he remained free from pain, and in a placid state.

His mind is still as clear and bright as the sun now rising.

During all the time, for ten hours past, when he was free from pain he conversed cheerfully with the friends around his bedside, and more than once playfully reproached his faithful nurse Sarah, for not retiring to bed.

Mr Webster is fully conscious of his condition, as is evidenced from the consolations he is constantly addressing to his mourning family and friends.

Occasionally in the presence of those not his relatives, he speaks of public matters with a calmness and interest which clearly shows that the welfare of his country is as present and as dear to him as ever

The illustrious invalid is now asleep; but fears of further terrible suffering on his part are entertained by his friends, should he be again seized with vomiting on waking

On Friday afternoon he had the people employed in his family and upon his farm called in, and after giving them much earnest advice upon matters temporal and spiritual, bade them a last farewell.

MARSHFIELD, Saturday, Oct. 23—7 A. M.

Mr Webster's physicians have given out the following bulletin:—

"Mr. Webster has failed during the night, and is quite low and exhausted this morning."

MARSHFIELD, October 23—12½ P. M.

Mr. Webster still continues to sink. Shortly after six, o'clock this morning, he had further attacks of vomiting which are gradually wearing away his strength. He may live through the day, but it is thought he cannot survive through the night. Messages have just been despatched for Dr J. M. Warren, of Boston, requesting him to come down in the afternoon train

Just as this express starts, the following from his physician has been put into my hands:—

MARSHFIELD, 12 M., Saturday.

Mr Webster is steadily sinking; it is thought he will not survive more than twenty-four hours, if so long. His frame of mind is that of entire tranquility and happiness. He attends to all necessary business, and his mind maintains its usual attention to all subjects and persons.

MARSHFIELD, October 23—2 P. M.

Mr. Webster continues to sink. His mental faculties seem unclouded and brilliant as ever. He occasionally speaks to his family, contemplates death calmly, and is perfectly resigned

His physicians think he will expire during the night.

THE LATEST.

BOSTON, October 24—2 A. M.

Your express messenger has just arrived, having left Marshfield at ten o'clock last night, at which time Mr. Webster was not expected to survive more than one hour.

Dr. James Jackson left the patient at two o'clock in the afternoon.

During the early part of the afternoon there was some decrease in the swelling of Mr. Webster's abdomen, and fewer symptoms of nausea, but there were no signs of rallying.

Repeatedly in the course of the forenoon and the early part of the afternoon, he conversed freely and with great clearness of detail in relation to his private affairs and the condition of his farms, stating his plans fully, and the manner in which he wished to have them carried out.

About half past five o'clock Mr. Webster was again seized with violent nausea, and raised considerable dark matter tinged with blood. Exhaustion now increased rapidly, and his physicians held another consultation which resulted in a conclusion that his last hour was fast approaching.

He received the announcement and requested that the female members of his family might be called in, viz: Mrs. Webster, Mrs Fletcher Webster, Mrs. J. W. Paige and Miss Downs, of New York, to each calling them individually by name, he addressed a few words of farewell and religious consolation.

Next he had called in the male members of his family and the personal friends who have been here within the last few days, viz: Fletchrr Webster, (his only surviving son) Samuel A. Appleton, (his son in law) J. W. Paige, Geo. F. Curtis, Edward Curtis of New York, Peter Harvey and Charles Henry Thomas, of Marshfield, and Messrs. Geo. J. Abbott and W. C. Zantzinger, both of the State Department at Washington—addressing each by name he referred to his past relations with them respectively, and one by one bade them an affectionate farewell. This was about half past six.

He now had Mr. Peter Harvey called in again, and said to him:—"Harvey, I am not so sick but that I know you—I am well enough to know you. I am well enough to love you and well enough to call down the richest of Heaven's blessings upon you and yours. Harvey, don't leave me till I am dead—don't leave Marshfield till I am a dead man." Then as if speaking to himself, he said:—"On the 24th of October, all that is mortal of Daniel Webster will be no more."

He now prayed in his natural usual voice—strong, full, and clear—ending with "Heavenly Father, forgive my sins, and receive me to thyself, through Christ Jesus"

At Half-past seven o'clock Dr. J. M. Warren arrived from Boston to relieve Dr. Jeffries, as the immediate medical attendant

Shortly after he conversed with Dr. Jeffries, who said he could do nothing more for him than to administer occasionally a sedative potion: "Then," said Mr. Webster, "I am to to be here patiently till the end; if it be so, may it come soon."

At ten o'clock he was still lower, but perfectly conscious of everything that passed within his sight or hearing.

Doctors Jeffries and Porter have intimated an opinion that the immediate cause of the disease was a cancerous affection of some of the smaller intestines.

Should he die in the course of the night, an express will instantly start for Boston with the intelligence.

Sympathy for Mr. Webster.

SYRACUSE, Oct. 23, 1852

The rumor of Mr. Webster's death yesterday, created a great sensation here. The Sun is devoted in mourning, and gives a lengthy biography of the great statesman

[From the Boston Atlas, October 23.]

Information reached this city yesterday morning, from Marshfield, of the alarming illness of Daniel Webster. The information spread and a general gloom pervaded the city. Men spoke together in whispers, and the burthen of their conversation was the illness of Mr. Webster. At the present writing we have no other information in regard to his condition, than that he is alarmingly ill, and the general concurrent opinion is that the sands of his mortal life are fast running out

We heard yesterday that on Thursday he was able to dictate answers to some thirty letters, and that he made his will. Towards the closing of the afternoon his symptoms became critical, and little or no hope was expressed or entertained of his recovery. His strong mind remained clear and some time was occupied by him in prayer. He spoke freely upon religious topics and expressed his convictions of the truth of Revelation. There were present on the occasion, George C. Curtis, Esq., of this city, Hon. Edward Curtis of New York, and members of the family.

The illness of Mr Webster produced a profound sensation in this city, and we have no doubt that it will throughout the whole country. There is now no hope entertained that he will recover. We cannot allow this occasion to pass without expressing the feelings which we entertain. No man living ever felt a more profound regard for another, than we have for Mr. Webster. He was the American statesman from whose speeches and conversation we gathered the best ideas of our government and of the Constitution under which we live. Notwithstanding the estrangement which has within the last two years occurred to separate us, and which has given to others an opportunity to misrepresent our position, the sentiments of respect and attachment which were planted within our breast in other days have never been obliterated. For Mr. Webster's transcendent abilities no man ever felt a more profound regard; and although what appeared to us to be the path of duty led in a direction opposite to the one which he saw fit to tread within the last two years yet the separation has always been to us a source of extreme regret. Our convictions we could not disregard and we have no apologies to offer that we did not disregard them. Had we been false to them, we should have been unworthy to hold the position which we do. And we trust that what we may say in regard to Mr Webster will not be considered as less manifest because of the variance which of late—and only of late—has occurred to separate us.

There was a time when the relation which we held with the distinguished statesman was to a considerable degree confidential and it is one of the sources of satisfaction to us and which we now feel that during the two years of controversy, which have just passed, that trust was never violated

Mr. Webster without doubt possessed the most massive and vigorous mind that was ever vouchsafed to any one man in America. His speeches will ever be regarded as the purest specimens of American eloquence, and as among the richest treasure of his countrymen. They have been carefully preserved, and so far as they are concerned, it may be said of them as his upon another occasion said, "the past at least is secure." But it is not all together in his speeches that he was great, nor in them alone is evinced the vast powers of his unsurpassed intellect. Mr Webster was never seen to more advantage than within his own household at the family board, or in strolling with him over his farm at Marshfield or standing with him upon the sea beach and looking out upon the ocean before us, which, like the scope of his intellectual vision appeared boundless

We have enjoyed these things, and there are no events in our life in which we have experienced more pleasure. As we write, they involuntarily rise before us, like blessed visions of other and better days. To hear him converse upon the past, the present, the future in a familiar, colloquial manner, to listen to his great thoughts expressed in the purest words of our language and wonder how he could thus speak and think, are joys which we can find no words to express. It was our fortune to pass several days at his home in Marshfield some six or eight years ago and well we remember one beautiful night, when the heavens seemed to be studded with countless myriads of stars, that about nine o'clock in the evening we walked out, and he stood beneath the beautiful weeping elm which raises its majestic form within a few paces of his dwelling, and looking up through the leafy branches, he appeared for several minutes to be wrapped in deep thought, and at length as if the scene so soft and beautiful, had suggested the lines, he quoted certain verses of the eighth Psalm beginning with the words:—"When I consider thy heavens, the work of thy fingers; the moon and the stars which thou hast ordained; what is man that thou art mindful of him? and the son of man that thou visitest him? For thou hast made him a little lower than the angels and hast crowned him with glory and honor," &c. The deep low tone in which he repeated these inspired words, and the deep wrapped attention with which he gazed up through the branches of the elm, struck us with a feeling of greater awe and solemnity than we ever felt, when in a year or two later, we witnessed some of the most magnificent cathedrals of the old world venerable with the ivy of centuries, and mellowed with the glories of a daily church service for a thousand years. He was thinking then of the fardistant world, whereto it is promised that the good of this life shall live forever and ever. We remained out beneath the tree for over an hour and all the time he conversed about the scriptures, which no man has studied with greater attention, and of which no man whom we ever saw knew so much, or appeared to understand and appreciate so well. He talked of the books of the Old Testament especially, and dwelt with unmitigated pleasure upon Isaiah, the Psalms, and especially the Book of Job. The Book of Job, he said, taken as a mere work of literary genius, was one of the most wonderful productions of any age or in any language. As a epic poem, he deemed it far superior to either the Iliad or the Odyssey. The two last, he said, received much of their attraction from the mere narration of warlike deeds, and from the perilous escapes of the chief personages from death and slaughter; but the Book of Job was purely intellectual narrative. Its power was shewn in the dialogues of the characters introduced. The story was simple in its construction, and there was little in it to excite the imagination, or arouse the sympathy. It was purely an intellectual production, and depended upon the power of the dialogue, and not upon the interest of the story, to produce its effects. This was considering it merely as an intellectual work. He read it through very often, and always with renewed delight. In his judgment it was the greatest epic ever written. We well remember his quotation of some of the verses in the thirty eighth chapter:—"Then the Lord answered Job out of the whirlwind and said, Who is this that darkeneth counsel by words without knowledge? Gird up now thy loins like a man; for I will demand of thee, and answer thou me. Where wast thou when I laid the foundations of the earth? Declare if thou hast understanding," &c. Mr. Webster was a fine reader, and his recitation of particular passages to which he felt warm were never surpassed, and were capable of giving the most exquisite delight to those who could appreciate them

Mr Webster was great upon every matter upon which mankind feels or has felt an interest

Mr Webster was one of the best story tellers in the world. He could relate an anecdote with wonderful effect, and nothing was more easy than for him to "set the table in a roar." His fund of agreeable and of personal reminiscences was inexhaustible. No one could start a subject relating to history, and especially to American Congressional life, about which he could not relate some anecdote connected with some of the principal characters, which when told would throw additional light upon the narrative, and illustrate some prominent trait in the characters of the persons engaged in the transaction. This great gift he possessed in a degree unsurpassed. Mr Webster's "table talk" was fully equal to any of his more elaborate efforts in the Senate. He could talk, to use a somewhat misnomer in expression, as wise as he could speak. He had a keen sense of the ludicrous, and loved and appreciated nice touches of eccentric humor. We have many reminiscences of his story telling for, when at Washington, we often had the pleasure of dining at his table. On these occasions it was the purpose of those present to draw him out; and to do this, it was but necessary to start some topic in which he felt an interest. We shall never forget his account of his visit to Jefferson, at Monticello, his analysis of the character and intellectual attainments of Hamilton, who he thought, bore a closer resemblance to the younger Pitt than any other man in English or American history, and his anecdotes of Chief Justice Marshall and old Mr Stockton, of New Jersey, and of his ride from Baltimore to Washington in a wagon, with a stout burly fellow, who told him he was a robber.

But we must close our article. It has already grown to a length which we did not expect, or intend it should. We can only express our feelings in common with those of our fellow citizens, upon the apparently approaching termination of the life of the great statesman. He has lived to a green old age, having exceeded the limit prescribed to human life—or threescore and ten.

(From the Boston Courier, October 23.)

All other topics, at the present moment, give way in point of interest, to that of the expected decease of Mr. Webster—an event which the intelligence from Marshfield causes us to fear is now close at hand. His disease, although it had much reduced his physical powers, had been so far checked as to hold out rational hopes of his ultimate recovery and at so late a period as Tuesday last, the physicians in attendance upon him were of opinion that he would be able to visit Boston in a few weeks. But on that day symptoms of an unpromising character manifested themselves, and it became apparent that the patient was rapidly sinking under his protracted disease. At noon on Thursday, the indications were of so unequivocal a character as to dissipate all reasonable hope for his life. His family then judged it proper to make such an announcement of his condition as might prepare the public for the expected calamity, and to request that all political action in the name of Mr. Webster might be suspended

The intelligence that Mr Webster was at the point of death reached Boston yesterday morning, and spread a universal gloom throughout the city. All political proceedings were discontinued, and the meetings to-night in procession, &c., assigned for last evening, were countermanded.

When the people of the United States learn that Daniel Webster is no more, they will feel that a calamity has fallen upon the country, the like of which it has not witnessed since the death of George Washington. The national loss will be irreparable; the national grief will be heartfelt and unbounded. We have very recently spoken at some length upon this theme, in the view of preparing our readers for the sorrowful event, which, in spite of our hopes, we were fully sensible could not be very far off, and might be actually impending. We abstain, therefore, from further comment at present, and await the result with a sad heart, cheered only by the reflection that "while there is life there is
