GARBAGE COLLECTION

In regard to a communication published in the Star some days ago about the collection of garbage so late in the day in the business district, Sam Johnson, who is at the head of the department says that the department is anxious to meet all requirements, and to that end welcomes complaints and suggestions. He asks that all persons who notice delinquency in the service, or have suggestions for improvements will communicate with the department, giving time and place and promises that they shall be thoroughly looked into. In some cases garbage is uncollected because householders have failed to pay for the service. In such cases it is up to the Board of Health to see that the householder does not create or maintain a nuisance.

There are eighteen garbage wagons and carts in the service and promptness of citizens in reporting delinquencies will greatly aid the department in securing efficiency.

As to the time of collection, Johnson says no complaints have been received that it is collected too late in the day in the down town district, but he will be very glad to receive suggestions in regard to the matter, and to discuss the subject with business men and others interested.

COST OF LIVING.

According to the statisticians the average cost of living in the United States has been increased in the last few years of piping protectionist prosperity about 60 per cent. This is an aspect of our high stepping forward movement that the favored interests who are reaping the harvests they had no hand in sowing do not like to dwell upon. But it is a matter of serious thinking for the wage-earner. If his earnings have not increased in proportion to his necessary outgo, so far as he is concerned prosperity is a delusion.—Philadelphia Record.

THE MOLOKAI FORESTS

NATURALIST PERKINS BRINGS GOOD NEWS.

Under System of Fencing, Cattle Herding and Deer Reduction—Threatened Forests are Reestablishing.

Good news of the Molokai forests has been brought back by R. L. C. Perkins who returned on the Lehua from an entomological trip. The forests which have been in imminent peril of total extinction from cattle and deer have, through a vigorous system of fencing been given a new lease of existence which is being utilized to the best advantage; innumerable young and healthy shoots and trees springing up now that the animals can no longer exterminate them and promising before very long to replace the trees that have been destroyed and restore the Molokai forests to much of their pristine verdure and abundance.

The encouraging report brought by Mr. Perkins is all the more encouraging in the face of the verdict given by expert Griffiths during his tour of the islands, when he stated that the Molokai forests have become so denuded by the depredations of cattle that they are practically extinct and can only be saved by a lavish campaign of exterminating and fencing.

Mr. Griffiths, applying known conditions to the growth of the trees apparently underestimated the fertility of the Hawaiian soil and the wonderful recuperative power of forests under local climatic conditions. No matter how bare the forest spaces, security from the inroads of grazing animals seems to be the only impetus needed.

This happy condition of affairs has been brought about largely by the efforts of Mr. Munro who is in charge of the cattle ranch on the island. Under his direction and supervision miles of fences, of smooth and barbed wire have been erected, the cattle having been first carefully driven out while a man has been detailed to shoot th deer, and the results are now rapidly making themselves manifest. In further pursuance of the system, instead of the land being reclaimed in the old pioneer fashion, Mr. Munro recognizing the vast importance of forests to any industry of agricultural nature, is reclaiming the forests from the land. As soon as the boundary of the forests is established; hogs are turned on the land close to the protecting fence with the result that the soil is thoroughly grubbed up and turned over giving dormant seeds a chance to assert themselves. Directly the new growth shows above the ground that strip is in turn fenced in while the good work continues at a lower level.

While the cattle have been great damage makers to the trees the deer have done more than their share, where the cattle ate the undergrowth the deer, not content with grazing have killed the larger trees which stand in large contingents, white and dead, their bark ripped off and their trunks gashed in every direction, presumably be the deer rubbing their antlers against the trunks to clear them of the velvet although the younger trees may have furnished bark esteemed edible and even succulent by the deer.

It is nine years since Mr. Perkins visited Molokai and the inroads made into the deer are plainly visible. Where a herd of two to three hundred could be seen at close quarters by the casual camper, now even the expert hunter is not sure of getting a shot. The deer will never probably be entirely exterminated from the forests, neither does such an extreme measure seem to be necessary as long as they are kept within limits. The skins of the dead game are becoming more valuable as they become shyer and scarcer while the forest breathes more freely for their absence.

The broad cattle and deer trails through which the hungry beasts once roamed at large are rapidly becoming obliterated with new undergrowth by the new order of things although the results of their work are plainly apparent in the large patches of dead forest yet visible. So heavy were their depredations that even the insects that assailed the inured trees after the deer had gashd them, have become extinct for lack of occupation and Mr. Perkins was disappointed, agreeably in one sense, by finding numerous varieties completely extinct. The bulk of the trees on Molokai are ohia.

Expert Griffith's recommendation was to conserve the trees first at the head waters and then gradually extend the limit of healthy forest and this plan sems to have been broadly adopted by Mr. Munro who is held up by entomologist Perkins as a shining example to others who like H. P. Baldwin, Eben Low and one or two more, follow in his steps. Mr. Munro comes from New Zealand where the graziers have liberal ideas about forest values in connection with their business.

A steady Kona blew for several days over the Molokai island and brought a blessing in its train in the shape of a heavy fall of rain on the lowlands, which they sadly needed. Rain falls with sufficient regularity and abundance on the mountains but the levels have not been well supplied of late. Three inches and a half of welcome moisture fell last week as an incentive to the ranchers to continue their propitiatory offerings towards the wood gods.

The trip back in the Lehua was an extremely rough one for the passengers, the weather in the channel being severe. Professor Koebele is making an effort to get Mr. Perkins to accompany him in his trip to Mexico but the naturalist has much work yet to complete his labors on the fauna of Hawaii for the Bishop museum and the English scientific institution for whom he is working.

AT THE ORPHEUM.

Tonight and tomorrow night will be the last opportunities of seeing the great magical, illusional, mind reading and hypnotic exhibition of Cunning as he leaves for Australia Wednesday.

The last few nights Cunning's show has been meeting with unusual success and the attendance has been constantly increasing. It is expected that the house will be crowded tonight and the show certainly deserves it.

Saturday afternoon the little ones enjoyed a matinee and Cunning put forth his best efforts to please them.

The performance tonight will be the regular sleight of hand, digital, illusion, etc., with some new features.

WHAT HURTS CUBA

HER MARKET MOSTLY IN DANGER FROM EUROPE.

The Working of the Sugar Bounty System in the Old World and Its Effect on Prices.

The agitation of the sugar question in connection with our duty toward Cuba has had the effect of bringing to the surface the fact that the market for Cuban sugar is in more danger from the bounty system of Europe than from the tariff of the United States. The world's crop of sugar this year is placed at 10,500,000 tons. Of this amount, 7,000,000 tons will be produced by the sugar-beet crop of Europe; 200,000 tons by the sugar-beet growers of the United States; 300,000 tons by the cane-sugar growers of Louisiana; and about 200,000 tons will be produced in Hawaii, Porto Rico, and the Philippines. The consumption of sugar in this country is estimated at 2,200,000 tons, and as our production, including our dependencies, is only 300,000 tons, there is a deficiency of 1,900,000 tons, which must be supplied by importation. These figures are based on the estimated production of the crop now being grown and harvested, which is expected to be the largest the world has known.

Europe being the producer of nearly seven-eighths of the whole, fixes the prices in our market, as elsewhere. The effect of this, particularly on Cuba, is unfortunate, because the price fixed is not a natural one. European countries have built up their sugar industry by paying a bounty on sugar which is exported. It has been increased from time to time until now it approximates nearly seven dollars a ton in most beet-sugar countries abroad. In addition, exported sugar receives, through the "Kartel," or great German sugar trust, an indirect bounty of four-tenths of a cent per pound. The result is that the foreign sugar producer depends for profit on sugar exports, on the bounties received from the government, and the trust. This enables him to send sugar to New York and London at cost. The recent price for raw cane-sugar from Cuba, in New York, has been three and three-quarter cents, duty paid, for the standard ninety-six degree polarization. Now, however, raw beet-sugar can be imported from Europe for three and seven-tenths cents, which illustrates the competition which Cuba must meet, and how destructive it is when the cost of production in Cuba is two and one-half cents per pound.

There is wide-spread dissatisfaction with the bounty system, even in Europe, and there is now a conference sitting in Brussels trying to effect a unanimous agreement to abolish it. It must be unanimous to prevent giving the producers of one European country an advantage over another. The dependencies of England are protesting against being shut out of the market of the mother country. They produce about 500,000 tons together, and their natural market is in England, but while the German consumer has to pay the equivalent of eight cents per pound, the same grade of refined sugar is exported to London and sold at three cents a pound, duty paid. For the benefit of her colonies England has notified the conference at Brussels that unless the bounty system is abrogated Great Britain will levy a countervailing duty on "bounty-fed" sugar equal to the bounty it has received. A similar proposition has been laid before President Roosevelt, as a means of helping Cuba without injuring the sugar producers of the United States. If adopted, the movement would bring strong pressure upon the conference in Brussels. Its practicability is now being investigated by the Ways and Means Committee of the House, whose research will be along the lines of the commercial relations existing between this country and Germany and Austria. On the result depends our action toward Cuba. If it is favorable to the countervailing duty, no legislation will be needed, as an order to that effect can be issued by the Secretary of the Treasury. If the view of the committee is unfavorable, it is probable they will prepare a bill providing for some tariff concession.—S. F. Argonaut.

STREETS OF FLORENCE.

Fierce Wind From Apennines Blows During Winter.

Although Florence is the most popular place of residence in Europe for Americans excepting those great capitals, London, Paris and Rome, it does not appeal to me like some other cities. The streets are narrow, dark and cold. A fierce wind from the Apennines is blowing more than half the time from November till April, and they act like the flues of a chimney, so that the rush of air is concentrated in them and seems colder and stronger than it actually is. The sunshine never reaches many of the streets, and the palaces, although most of them are ideals in architecture so far as the exteriors are concerned, are monstrous piles of stone and brick, divided into enormous rooms seldom less than twenty by thirty feet and as often as large as forty by sixty in size, and with ceilings from twenty to forty feet high. There are no means of heating whatever, and it would be difficult to warm them with the biggest coils of steam pipe ever constructed. They are without comforts or conveniences and are as cheerless as prisons. When you put your hand against a plastered wall at midday it is as cold as a block of ice. The reason why these old piles are always cool in the summer is that summer doesn't last long enough to let the heat work through the walls.

There is very little satisfaction in shivering with cold from morning till night even if one does live in a building designed by Michael Angelo and can turn his head to the ceiling at any time and study a fresco by Raphael. A good anthracite base burner in a Chicago boarding house is preferable to such grandeur. And I was never able to work up any enthusiasm for art in a gallery where the stone floors are so cold that the feet become numb in a very few minutes, and the air so frosty that you can see your breadth; and the heart goes out in sympathy to the hundreds of artists who go to the Uffizi and Pitti galleries every day and copy pictures while garbed in heavy blankets and their noses and fingers blue with cold.

For five months in the year the churches of Florence are refrigerators warranted to chill human flesh in a very few moments, and the fact that their architecture and decorations are sublime is no substitute for a hot-air furnace.—Chicago Record-Herald.
