A Newspaper. Who has never felt the pleasure that it brings?

It always tells us of so many strange and wondrous things.

It makes us weep at tales of woe; it fills with smiles our faces.

It tells us of the price of stocks, and now much to pay for laces,

And when, and where, and how, and why to buy our goods at Macy's.

Has war's loud clarion called to arms—has lightning struck a tree?

Has Jenkins broke his leg—or has there been a storm at sea?

Has Mary's little lamb been found—or comet's tail been seen?

Or has some heiress with her groom run off to Gretna Green?

All this and many wonders more you from this sheet may glean. [Adapted from the poet.

First Lady—Well, did you go to Macy's last week?

Second Lady—Yes, I did.

First Lady—Why, I thought you belonged to a society that passed a resolution that they would never go there again; and I thought your husband said he would get a divorce from you if you ever went by the door even.

Second Lady—Well, so we did, but I couldn't help it. I read Macy's advertisement last week aloud at the breakfast table, and there were six other ladies who had resolved never to go there again, who heard me announce my resolution to return to Macy's. I never missed anything so much in my life. All the little choice articles that I had been accustomed to get there I was completely out of, and I could not find them elsewhere, except at extravagant prices, and many of them not at all. Finding that I was determined to go, four of them loaded me down with commissions for themselves, and I judged from the amount and variety of those commissions that they had suffered as much as I had by staying away. Well, I went to Macy's. Strange to say, the store stood in the very same spot that it did before. It was the same pleasant store, brightened up with a fresh coat of paint, and refitted for the coming season; the same pleasant faces behind the counter that I have seen there so often, and I felt at home in a minute.

First Lady—Well, is it true that he sold a splendid Sash Ribbon at 35c. a yard, and a fine Jaconet at 18c. a yard, and Ladies' Night Dresses at 82c.?

Second Lady—Yes, it is true, for I bought some of each, and when I went home, and displayed my purchases to my six friends, they instantly returned to their old belief, that Macy's was the right place, after all, and the next forenoon we all went there shoppling in a merry crowd together.

Such is the popular verdict for Macy.
