Bury me in the Morning.

BY STEPHEN A. DOUGLAS.

We find in our exchange papers the following plaintive and very poetical composition, which is attributed to the pen of the late Senator Douglas:

Bury me in the morning, mother—
O, let me have the light
Of one bright day on my grave, mother,
Ere you leave me with the night:
Alone in the night of the grave, mother,
'Tis a thought of terrible fear—
And you will be here alone, mother,
And stars will be shining here,
So bury me in the morning, mother,
And let me have the light
Of one bright day on my grave, mother,
Ere I'm alone with the night,

You tell of the Savior's love, mother:
I feel it in my heart—
But oh! from this beautiful world, mother,
'Tis hard for young to part;
Forever to part, when here, mother,
The soul is fain to stay:
For the grave is deep and dark, mother,
And heaven seems far away.
Then bury me in the morning, mother,
And let me have the light
Of one bright day on my grave, mother,
Ere I'm alone with the night.

The Czar's Sympathy with Union.—Alexander of Russia's letter to the President of the United States has been the subject of intense excitement among the diplomats. Both the matter and the manner of the letter, and the extraordinary precaution taken by the Emperor to have proclaimed to the American people his sympathy with the Union, and his desires for the permanence and prosperity of Republican institutions, cause what the diplomatists pronounce a "profound sensation." Of course, its effect upon the other Governments of Europe is the first question asked. It is the conceded opinion that it must cause England to think before she attempts a recognition of the rebels, even though she go without cotton for the next five years, and that she will soon conclude it to be her interest to unite with the Governments of the Continent in such a demonstration as will leave the rebels no room to hope for European sympathy or assistance.

McClellan's Reputation in England.—The London Globe, in speaking of military operations in the United States, says:

In all the combats that have occurred, the best general has been triumphant. Lyon, Sigel and McClellan, with troops of the same stuff as those engaged at Manassas, have defeated their opponents. McDowell was inferior to Beauregard, and failed before him. The new leader, McClellan, is of a different stamp. He has shown his mettle. Every order he issues, every measure he adopts, proves that he is a real soldier. His advent into the camp before Washington has been marked by great and salutary changes. The troops will be drilled; the camp, the men and their arms kept clean; insubordination will be put down; drunkenness will meet appropriate punishment, and incompetent officers will be partially weeded out.

What is equally important to success, Gen. McClellan is beginning to confide in his troops, as they have all along confided in him. At the close of a sharp skirmish across the Potomac the other day, in which about a brigade was engaged on each side, he telegraphed his success to Gen. Scott, saying the troops behaved with the utmost steadiness, and that there would be no more Bull Run disasters.

The Native Prodigy.—All New South Wales has seen, or at least heard of, the "fat boy," who made his tour of the colony some twelve months ago; but we have now a greater marvel to notice, and one that will no doubt attract the visits of all who have the taste to view such vagaries of nature. The "Native Prodigy" is a girl of nearly thirteen years of age, thirty-five inches in height, and weighs upwards of twelve stone. She is unmistakeably "the stoutest and shortest girl of her age" we ever saw, and may well be reckoned one of the wonders of the age. She was born on Watt's station, Bumbaldry, near Lachlan, and will complete the thirteenth year of her age in the course of five or six weeks. When she reached her fifth year, she stopped growing, and her parents having become alarmed, consulted the medical faculty in Sydney, who were of opinion that should she survive over her seventh year, the dangerous crisis would be passed. She rapidly "fell into flesh," and since that time has increased in rotundity. Her flesh is mottled and hard, the external signs of good health. She never complains of pain, and her breathing is perfectly easy. There is a peculiarity in her voice which would be difficult to describe. We understand that she is usually very playful, but on the occasion of our visit she was unfortunately suffering from the fatigue of the journey from Burrangong. Her appetite is not by any means delicate, her favorite dish being beef steaks and fried onions! Sweetmeats she has an aversion to, and therefore her flesh is not increased by an inordinate consumption of saccharine matter. The fat boy's "vanity" leaned the other way, and we have been told that he was an immense consumer of bon bons, raw sugar and treacle, all of which would have tendency to increase the amount of flesh. The name of our new prodigy is Mary Jane Youghman. She proceeds to Goulburn to-day for the purpose of holding a series of levees in that township.—Australian Paper.
