A Human Magnet.

BALTIMORE, Dec. 4.—The scientists connected with the Johns Hopkins University are engaged in investigating the peculiar powers possessed by the fingers of Louis Hamburger, the twenty-one-year-old son of Philip Hamburger, a well-known merchant of this city. When the hands of the young man are thoroughly dried and touched to any polished object they hold it like a magnet. He can thus raise up a quantity of pins which will dangle from them, his index fingers possessing the quality more than any others. He also raises up a glass tube freighted with a six-pound weight. Prof. William Simon has him in charge and proposes to give some scientific experiments before the Johns Hopkins Scientific Association.

SUCH A JAM

Such a crowd—such a rush—never before known in New York; the cause of all this excitement is. Yesterday the large building on Broadway, next to corner of 9th st. was opened to the public with a great ($2,000,000) Two-Million-Dollar Bankrupt Assignee Sale of fine Men's Clothing, being the stock of six large clothing firms that failed.
