Letter from Hartford, Conn.

HARTFORD, April 1, 1865.

MR. EDITOR:—I have just returned from the Athenæum, in which there is a most interesting collection of art, science, literature and curiosities. Among the latter are some Hawaiian idols, the most hideous of all that hideous race. Among many other objects of interest I saw the remnants of the memorable Charter Oak. Its gnarled trunk is sacredly preserved to hand down to future generations.

This aristocratic little capital of the wooden nutmeg State wears her honors proudly. She cannot boast of so venerable a college as her sister, but she is very proud of her literati, and Trinity College she intends shall in future years rival Yale and Harvard. She also claims to be the most wealthy city in the State. There is apparently less poverty here than in any other city of its size that I have ever seen. The dwelling-houses seem almost universally to be "abodes of comfort;" the majority are beautiful, many elegant, and not a few magnificent. The palatial residence of the late Mr. Colt, inventor of the revolver, is surpassed by few in the country. The extensive lawn is ornamented with marble Apollos, Psyches and Cupids, bronze centaurs, summer-houses, silvery fountains, &c., rendering it exquisitely beautiful. This "garden of the angels on the slopes of Paradise" is freely opened to the public. The stables might easily be mistaken for an elegant church. The mansion is built in oriental style, and looks as if it might have been transplanted from Constantinople.

As I am visiting with a literary friend, an author, I have had the good fortune to make the acquaintance of several of the literati, among others Mrs. Sigourney, Dr. Bushnell and Mrs. Stowe.

Mrs. Sigourney

Is a delightful old lady, now passing into her second childhood. It is understood that she likes to see visitors from all parts of the world, consequently a great many call on her. There is a beautiful marble bust of her in the Athenæum, besides one or two handsome paintings. She is of delicate frame, is very lady-like in her manners, has a sweet voice and a still handsome face. She writes but little poetry nowadays.

Dr. Bushnell

I was more anxious to see than any other man in America. He now stands, by univeasal consent, among the very first of living thinkers and divines. It is said that his works are having a larger sale in England than those of any other American author. I had the pleasure of seeing him among his books in his study. I suppose it will be no trespass on his hospitality to report in the far-off "Cannibal Islands" a little of what he said and how he looked. Though his health is now much improved, he is prematurely gray. He is rather small of stature, about five feet five inches. He has a full forehead, shaggy brow, and deep-set eye. His and President Hopkins' are the two most noticeable heads I have seen. After seeing these men, one cannot help feeling that there is much truth in the science of phrenology, whatever false claims the phrenologists may have made. It is said that Dr. B. was quite handsome when young. If the picture in the Athenæum is at all correct, he must have been. His manner is cordial, animated and direct. In conversation he uses familiar, idiomatic expressions, which cut right to the core of whatever is under discussion. He told me that the author who most influenced him in his youth, who, in fact, "revolutionized for life" his whole mode of thought, was Coleridge. In "God and Christ," he says, "it costs me no mortification to confess that the most fructifying writer I ever read was the one in whom I was, at first, able only to see glimpses or gleams of truth; one whom it required years of study and reflection, of patient suspension and laborious self-questioning to be able fully to understand; and, indeed, whom I never since have read at all, save in a chapter or two, which I glanced over just to see how obvious and clear what before was impossible had now become. He told me that he had reference in this passage to Coleridge's writings, especially his "Aids to Reflection." He recommends to the study of the young the Bible and Shakspeare; thinks that the poets are the true metaphysicians, and if there be any complete science of man to come, they must bring it. He says we have now got a new battle of the supernatural on hand, in opposition to the naturalistic tendencies of the new theories of the "Conservation and Correlation of Forces." You probably have seen Professor Youmans' book on this subject. Prof. Y. married Mrs. Judge Lee, formerly of the Sandwich Islands. Dr. B. is eager for the fray. He is also meditating numerous other publications; is anxious to expose the metaphysical fallacies of Hamilton, Stewart Mill, and Herbert Spencer; says they constantly cheat themselves with words, losing the thought of which they are only the figurative symbols. His newly-published volume of sermons, "Christ and his Salvation," is creating much discussion. The March Atlantic has a eulogistic criticism of it.

Mrs. Stowe,

I also had the pleasure of seeing at her home. She has lately built in Hartford near the residences of her two sisters, Mrs. Hooker and Mrs. Perkins. The building is hid away under the trees by a stream in the suburbs of the town. She seems to have sought as secluded a place as possible. The building is at once simple and elegant. Within it is full of exquisite works of art—engravings, photographs, paintings, statuary, &c., &c. Among other things I noticed a beautiful little bust of her brother Henry Ward, also a magnificent photograph six feet long of the Coliseum. A large proportion of the paintings were of religious subjects. The paper, furniture and carpets were simple and unobtrusive—in short, the house was just what one would picture it from her "House and Home Papers," which she wrote while it was in the process of erection. I had heard so much said about Mrs. Stowe's homeliness that I was happily disappointed in her personal appearance. Her face is plain but interesting, especially when she is engaged in animated conversation.

She was reading Gail Hamilton's "New Atmosphere,"—was much interested and liked her ideas, but feared the book would injure the good cause it advocates by the tone in which it is written. She expressed her belief in the justice and wisdom of allowing women to vote. She seemed to have studied the subject on all sides, so that while she was temperate in her views, she was full and explicit in her reasons.

The points on which she spoke most particularly were their virtue, intelligence and interest as compared with the men. Also their ownership of property, making them subject to taxation, and its probable effect in giving tone to their character, the nature of the act in itself, the mere casting of a vote, involving.—In her opinion,—nothing unwomanly. It is noticeable that Goldwin Smith, Herbert Spencer, as well as many others of the best writers on political economy in Europe, fully agree with her in her opinions on this subject.

She said that Miss Dickinson was the only lady that she had desired to hear speak in public a second time. She takes much pleasure in giving accounts of her travels—told many interesting incidents of her acquaintance with Cobden, Bright, and Macaulay. Speaking of the Darwin's "Development Theory," as connected with Slavery, (in which he argues that man is a lineal descendant of a polyp—his last sub-human ancestor being an ape minus the caudal elongation of the vertebral column,) she ridiculed it with much wit. Thought Agassiz was deserving of much credit for having so thoroughly exposed its fallacies—though she feared his only theology was ich-theology. Speaking of his devotion to fishes, she said that if his wife, she could consider herself the rival of any new discovered gill-breather. She takes an hour pride in showing her fine conservatory in which she has a goodly collection of rare plants. She is anxious to get a taro. She thinks you would be wise at the Islands to pursue with diligence the cultivation of cotton—that however soon the rebellion may end the price will remain such as to make it highly remunerative.

APRIL 3D.—The telegraph announces that Richmond is taken! Hurrah! The is the wildest excitement on the streets. The stores are closed, the merchants assembled downtown and sang "America," and "Praise God from whom all blessings flow." Thos. Carlyle say "Let America succeed and England goes to Democracy by express train." Let her go. VIATOR.

COAL FOR PLANTATION USE.
THE UNDERSIGNED HAVE ON HAND
300 TONS BEST LEHIGH COAL,
300 Tons BEST WELSH STEAM COAL,
100 Tons NAINAINO COAL.
Which they offer for sale delivered on the Wharf, at very moderate rates.
N. B.—In case where there is a short supply of steam or boiling power, from damp wood, or from any other cause, the addition of a few hundred pounds of any of the above Coal will add from 25 to 50 per cent. to the evaporating power.
The Lehigh Coal is very clean and smokeless and gives a great local heat.
The Welsh Coal gives more flame and is very clean, burning to a white ash.
The Nainaino Coal is smoky and more inclined to clinker, but when supplied in small quantities at a time and with a good draft gives more flame than the others.
The undersigned confidently recommend to Sugar Planters a TRIAL of a few tons each of the above, as in many cases an expense of say $10 per day may add from 25 to 50 per cent. to the daily yield of sugar.
