Total Eclipse of the Sun in July.

(From the National Intelligencer.)

The total eclipse of the sun, which will occur on the 18th of July next, is regarded by astronomers as the most important which will be witnessed during the present century. It will be visible as a partial eclipse throughout the United States, but will be total only in a small part of Oregon and Washington Territory. The central line of the moon's shadow will strike the coast fifteen miles north of the mouth of Columbia river, (latitude forty-six degrees twenty-five minutes, north) soon after sunrise, and the breadth of the shadow will be eighty miles. Moving thence in a northeast direction, it will pass near to Olympia; across the southern extremity of Flathead lake, and north of Lake Winnipeg, to York factory, in latitude fifty-seven degrees north, and on the southeast of Hudson's Bay. At Fort York the breadth of the shadow will be one hundred and forty miles. It will leave this continent at Cape Chidley (or Cheadleigh), the northeast point of Labrador, in latitude fifty-nine and a half degrees north, and bending, first eastward, and afterwards to the southeast; after traversing the Atlantic ocean, it will reach Spain near to Santander, on the Bay of Biscay. The shadow will not pass over the entire surface traversed by the waters of the river Ebro; nearly all of the Balearic islands except Minorca; the gulf of Lyons near Cape Carbon; pass to the south of Tripoli; and, finally, at ten hours forty-six minutes a. m. (mean time Washington) it will leave the earth at Massowah, on the Red Sea. The end of the eclipse will be about an hour later.

At Astoria the duration of the total eclipse will be one minute and fifty-four seconds; at Cape Chidley, two minutes and fifty seconds; in Spain, three minutes thirty seconds; and in Algeria, three minutes twelve seconds. It is during this phase, and when the whole of the direct light is cut off from the observers, that protuberances, sometimes rose colored, sometimes black, and on other occasions resembling luminous clouds, are witnessed as appendages apparently to the sun. To determine their true character is an object of the most earnest interest in physical science, and at every recurrence of a total eclipse, astronomers undertake long journeys for the purpose of placing themselves near the central line of the shadow, from whence only are the phenomena visible. At the last total eclipse visible on this continent one astronomer went from France to the northern part of Brazil; a second from this country, under the auspices of the Smithsonian Institution, traversed the desert in the northern part of Peru; and a third went from Chili to Peru. The two former were successful, the last encountered a cloudy morning.

But apart from the study of solar physics, for which the next eclipse, in comparison with that just referred to, will be favorable in the proportion of three to one, its range entirely across this continent and a part of Europe, whose longitude has been carefully determined, affords an opportunity to fix the geographical position of both the East and the West coasts of North America with a precision which will not occur during very many years.

It is known that the astronomer royal of England will go to Santander, and other parties will accompany him thither, to occupy stations at Portuguella, Bilbao, Pasajenes, etc. The Bavarian astronomer proposes to place himself near the mouth of the Ebro, on the Mediterranean, and the French will occupy Palma, in Majorca, and Bugia, in Algeria; so that there will be near a hundred European observers stretched along the center of the shadow in Europe and Africa, a force ample to gather a rich harvest of physical results as well as of corresponding data for our geographical question.

We hear nothing of preparation by American astronomers, but, having ample evidence of their enterprise and self-sacrifice on other occasions, we must attribute their silence to the difficulty they foresee of obtaining transport at the proper time. Cannot this be obtained for them? In addition to the strictly scientific subject matter, our country has a direct practical interest in the occasion; for the thousands of ships that frequent our coasts are immediately benefited by every approximation to accurate knowledge of the longitude. So extensively is this ever present to the mind of the distinguished astronomer of the coast survey that he spares no efforts which may add to the security of our commerce, and we doubt not a coast survey party will be instructed to make the necessary observations in Oregon. There his co-operation must cease; for Cape Chidley is beyond our territorial limits, and without special authority, we presume, he would not send a party thither.

Amusing and Interesting Reminiscence of Washington

A correspondent of the Norfolk (Va.) Herald, furnished that paper the following interesting reminiscence of Washington, taken from Curtis' "Private Memoirs" of the great and good man. The author of the "Memoirs" introduced it as one, and not the least characteristic, among the many illustrations that exist of Washington's well known particularity and method in all his business transactions, and revealing his habit of reducing to writing even such bargains and understandings as, from their apparent want of importance, would by most men be trusted to memory only.

In the full understanding of the matter, it must be premised that Barter had been for some time, prior to this contract, in the service of Washington, and had on several occasions manifested so decided a predilection for the bottle, as to have established the fact of its being a confirmed habit with him, and thus to have induced Washington to draw up the bond specifying the particular occasion on which Barter could get drunk, and new one at such occasions he might remain so, and yet be prescribing the number of his ordinary daily drams.

That Washington must have had in his composition a considerable slice of sly humor, is evident from his having used for such a trifling matter the prolix verbose, legal forms usually employed in important contracts, instead of a brief, simple memorandum; and from his having called in such a man as Tobias Lear to formally attest a bargain in which matters of no greater import were involved than a gardener's fond for one year, and eight dollars to be expended in spree on certain specified occasions within that period.

"Articles of agreement made this twelfth day of April, Anno Domini one thousand seven hundred and eighty-seven, by and between George Washington, Esq., of the parish of Truro, in the county of Fairfax, State of Virginia, on the one part, and Philip Barter, gardener, on the other witness that the said Philip Barter, for and in consideration of the covenants hereafter mentioned, doth promise and agree to serve the said George Washington in the station of a gardener, as a gardener, and that he will, during the said time, conduct himself soberly, diligently and honestly; and that he will faithfully and industriously perform all and every part of his duty as a gardener to the best of his knowledge and abilities, and that he will not at any time suffer himself to be disguised with liquor except on times hereinafter mentioned.

"In consideration of these things being well and duly performed on the part of Philip Barter, the said George Washington doth agree to allow him (the said Philip) the same kind and quality of provisions he has heretofore had, and likewise, annually, a decent suit of clothes, befitting a man in his station; to consist of coat, vest and breeches; a working jacket and breeches of homespun, besides two other shirts; three check do., two linen overalls; as many pair of shoes as are necessary for him; four dollars at Christmas, with which he may go to fresh food three days and four nights; two dollars at Easter to effect the same purpose; two dollars Whitsuntide to be drunk for two days; and a dram in the morning and a drink of grog at dinner at noon.

"For the true and faithful performance of all, and each part of these things, the parties have hereunto set their hands on the twenty-third day of April, Anno Domini, 1787.

A Visit to Robinson Crusoe's Island.

While on board the ship Golden Rocket, lying at Greenwich Dock, we were permitted by Capt. C. N. Pendleton to examine his log book in which he gives an account of his visit to the Island of Juan Fernandez (Robinson Crusoe's Island.) The ship was on her passage to this port from Boston, and had on board fifty-five passengers (twenty-five of whom were ladies) who intend to make California their future place of residence. Getting short of water, Capt. Pendleton decided to stop at Juan Fernandez for a further supply, and therefore shaped his course thither—the Island being nearly on his track. At six p. m. on the evening of March 24th, they doubled the eastern end of the island, and at seven they rounded to off the bay of St. Joseph, at the head of which the few inhabitants now residing on the island are located. The facilities for landing water at the island, Capt. Pendleton represents not to be very good. The casks must be taken on shore and filled, rolled back into the water and purbocked into the boat. While the crew were at the work the passengers rambled off in different directions to make discoveries. The island is twenty-five miles long, by about four in breadth. The land is very high, rising in rugged mountain peaks—one of them, Tunkuru, 3,000 feet above the sea. The peaks are generally overlying with clouds. The valleys are exceedingly fertile, the grass growing to the height of six or eight feet.

Figs, strawberries, peaches and cherries abound in their season. The Golden Rocket was there in the season of peaches, and the valleys and hill-sides were full of trees and loaded down with delicious fruit. Capt. Pendleton brought four barrels of the inhabitants and the passengers he many more. Strawberries flourish best in December and January. There are three remarkable caves in the sides of the hill facing the harbor, about thirty feet in length, twenty-five in width, and about the same in height. The inhabitants now number but fourteen, of whom Messrs. Day and Quintable from Valparaiso are the chief proprietors; they have been appointed overseers of the Island by the Chilian Government. Formerly a penal colony, numbering five hundred, was located here, and the caves above mentioned were used by them, but the project was found to be impracticable, and the convicts were taken back to the mainland. The Golden Rocket anchored on the opposite side from that upon which Selkirk lived, and there being a mountain to cross to reach the Robinson cave, no one could be induced to make the journey. The best landing is on the eastern side, but the water is twenty fathoms deep at the head of the bay, and in some places so bold is the shore that a boat tied to her painter and drifting to the limits, would be in seventy-five fathoms. An immense number of goats are running wild over the island, and an abundance of fish are taken on every coast. The water is obtained from a number of several small rivulets which flow over the rocks from the cloud-capped mountains.—San Francisco Times.

"If there is anything I hate, it is a woman with a lap-dog! I always want to drown it and put a baby in its place!"—Lord Nancy Fun, forgetting that too often the lap-dog survives feel the same way, but takes top dog because they can't have the baby.

Touch not the Queen—Woman her own Avenger.

About two years ago, one of the young ladies of Norwalk, Ohio, married a beautiful girl of the same place, and lived happily with her until last fall, when he departed for Pikes' Peak, leaving his young wife behind him. To avoid the sneers which would naturally have assailed her in her temporary widowhood, the lady mingled freely with society, never dreaming of harm; and, was only reminded of the construction which base minds are ever ready to put upon the conduct of the most innocent by a little signet with a fictitious name, in which the contemptible writer informed her that he had seen and admired her at various parties since her husband's departure, and had noticed that she was very "gay;" but would breathe his "suspicions" to no one if she would consent to meet him at a certain place. Fired with indignation at the baseness of the wretch who thus insulted her, the young wife resolved to trace out the author, and teach him a lesson in good manners. Writing a decoy note, and addressed it to the name given her, she placed it in the post office, and watched to see who called for it.

She had not waited long, when a spruce and consequential young coxcomb came to the place, entered, and demanded the treacherous missive. It was promptly handed to him, and he was leaving the office, with triumphant smiles spread all over his face, when the indignant fair one seized him by the collar of his fancy coat, drew a substantial cow-hide from under her shawl, and gave him a scoring that settled his old score with a vengeance. First he was frightened, then astonished, then thoroughly warmed up, and finally he pleaded for mercy most humbly, promising that he had not written "that letter," though no one had yet said that he had. The lady gave it to him, however, until she was too tired to strike another lick, and then let him off amid the laughter and jeers of the crowd which had collected to see the sport. That lady will be undisturbed in future; and the man who owns her for a wife should be proud of her.

As accidents will happen, even in well-regulated families, it is very desirable to have some cheap and convenient way for repairing Furniture, Toys, Crockery, etc., etc.
SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE
Meets all such emergencies, and no household can afford to be without it. It is always ready and to the sticking point. There is no longer a necessity for keeping chairs, splinter scissors, leather dates, and broken crofter. It is just the article for cane, shell, and other ornamental work, so popular with ladies of refinement and taste.
This admirable preparation is not cold, being chemically held in solution, and possessing all the valuable qualities of the best adhesive glues. It may be used in place of ordinary mucilage, being vastly more adhesive.
