News and Gossip.

By the arrival at San Francisco of the steamship Japan we have dates from Yokohama to the 24th of November, and from Shanghai to the 12th of the same month. The news from both Empires is quite meager.

The Mail of the 23d furnishes the following summary:

The past fortnight has been one of extreme dullness in regard to business or any events having a political significance. The weather has been exceptionally wet in and about the neighborhood of Yokohama and as far as the price of rice has responded in consequence. On the other hand, advices from Kobe are to the effect that the harvest is plentiful in the southern part of the Empire, and we believe that similar news is reported from the grain districts of the North.

The Government is busily, but we trust safely and effectually, presenting to the transformation and modifications of the national institutions which the abolition of the Shogunate has rendered necessary.

The railway works are progressing fast, and are ready in many places for the rails and rolling stock, now, it is to be hoped, well on their way. All the small causes of obstruction have been removed.

Constant shocks of earthquake have been experienced during the last fortnight, none of them being very severe, however. The disturbing action in the immediate neighborhood of the locality does not seem great, and, judging from the experience of the past twelve years, we need entertain no grave apprehensions with regard to the dangers which beset us from this source.

A Japanese merchant, dealing in silk-worm eggs, borrowed fourteen hundred rios from a merchant to speculate in rice, and the lender to insure repayment, seized the stock of eggs and silk until he should receive his money. The silk-worm egg merchant thereupon, on the 8th of November, committed "hari-kari" at Honda-gochome.

The Government is paying great attention to the military and naval organization of the Empire.

The Shanghai News Letter of November 14th gives the following summary of news:

A Pekin letter says there has been nothing thought of lately but the absent of the Hon. Mr. Seward and the party. Balls and dinners of balls are on the tapis, and as it is understood that Admiral Rodgers has brought the band of the United States steamer Colorado with him from Shanghai, their music for once in a long while, makes to put one best foot forward and step the shop. The Russian Legation, it is understood, will have the honor of sheltering our distinguished guest, the accommodation at the American Legation being far beneath the requirements of the occasion.

A Tientsin correspondent says:

Admiral Rodgers and suite, and ex-Secretary Seward and party, arrived here per Shantung on the evening of the 27th ultimo, en route to Pekin, whence they departed by boat on the morning of the 28th. The presence of so large a party, and especially the music discovered by the band, quite enlivened one generally quiet little place.

The most significant event of the month was the execution, on the morning of the 18th ult., of sixteen persons for the murder of foreigners on the 21st of June last. Among them is said to be the murderer of M. Simtanier. Some of the relatives of those executed have acknowledged to the receipt of 500 taels, that amount was paid to each family. The Chinese has acknowledged to the same; so that the executions are perfectly satisfactory so far as meeting the ends of justice is concerned. The officials are representing to the people that it was necessary to execute a few persons to appease the wrath of foreigners. The expression commonly used in referring to it is Cole-hin, to appease or satisfy anger.

Cider is playing the mischief with the Maine law. The Portland Press says: "There is cider everywhere. Every farmer has one or two barrels, at least, and every guest is regaled with it, while it is subjected to steady draughts of daily consumption in the family chalices quite frightful to see. No stage stops to change horses but all the passengers drink cider. In the city, all who are able have this year sent out their orders to the country for cider. Its unusual abundance makes it so cheap that new channels are opened for it where it never flowed before. The whole land has been ransacked to find barrels enough to hold it. If they should by any accident burst simultaneously, the whole State would be submerged in cider several feet deep."

A line in one of Moore's songs reads thus: "Our couch shall be roses bestangled with dew." To which a sensible girl replied: "I would give me the rheumatiz, and so it would you."

The Beet Sugar Operations at Alvarado.

The Alvarado correspondent of the San Leandro Gazette has furnished that paper with an excellent account of this enterprise, from its commencement to the period of its success; also with a description of the works and the method by which beets are converted into sugar:

Less than a year ago, a correspondence was opened between Rimesteel, Otto & Co., who were then successfully engaged in the manufacture of beet-root sugar in Fond du Lac, Wis., and Gen. C. L. Hutchinson and others of California, in regard to the yield per acre, etc., together with the inducements presented for the establishment of sugar-beet factories. Rimesteel wrote the first letter to California, on this subject, November 22d, 1869, and Hutchinson entered at once into the arrangments with energy and zeal, organized a company composed of some of the most influential and wealthy citizens of the State, with a capital stock of $250,000. Rimesteel, Otto & Collesme to California in the spring, and the company purchased some land of E. H. Dyer, and commenced the erection of the factory on the 9th of May last. There will only be beets enough to last about three months, but hereafter they will raise a larger crop, and expect to be able to run eight or nine months of the year, while in Germany a campaign for the manufacture of sugar lasts but four months.

It was intended to have the factory put in operation in October, but owing to the non-arrival of the machinery, some of which was manufactured in Germany, it had to be postponed, and not until Tuesday morning, November 15th, did the factory start up in earnest. They promised us that on Thursday following they would show us what we had never before seen—sugar made from beets in California.

Thursday came, and about 10 a.m., everything being in readiness, a portion of the contents of one of the pans was emptied into one of the sugar centrifugals, and incredible as it may appear, in less than three minutes it turned into white crystallized sugar. Those who were present and witnessed the operation through which it passed, will not be likely to soon forget it, while those who had entertained doubts were confirmed on the spot, and were overjoyed to know that it was a decided success. We have seen the sugar, and think it superior even to that made from cane. It is almost incredible, yet nevertheless the fact, that the beets that enter the factory one morning will come out the next morning nice white crystallized sugar. Everything thus far has worked satisfactorily, and the company are more than delighted.

I will now attempt to give a brief description of the dimensions, capacity, etc., of the factory, together with an imperfect sketch of the manner of manufacturing the sugar. The main building is 150 by 50 feet, and is three stories high, including the tower. The boiler house is 50 by 50 feet, and the bone-coal house 75 by 40 feet. The capacity of the factory is fifty tons of beets every twenty-four hours. In the first place, they are placed in a washer, which contains a large cylinder inside of a box that is filled with water, and when they come out they are as clean as though they had been washed by hand. This machine is capable of washing seventy-five tons per day. After they are washed they are placed in the elevator and hoisted into the upper story of the main building to what is called the grater, and when they emerge in the trough below they are ground to a pulp finer than horse-radish is generally grated. From this it passes into the juice centrifugals, of which there are ten. These centrifugals revolve at the rate of 1,200 times per minute, extracting all the juice and leaving nothing but the dry pulp. After its separation from the pulp, the juice passes into large troughs, and thence into the detaination pans. In these pans the juice is subjected to a chemical process, and after remaining for half an hour is passed into what the French call the monteges, located on the lower floor. From thence it is forced by steam into two large filter presses, and from thence it is sent to the saturation pans in the third story, where it undergoes another chemical process, and from these pans it passes into five large filters filled with animal-coal, and from there it passes into another monteges, and thence into large evaporating pans, where it is boiled down to a thick syrup, after which it passes back through the filters into the vacuum and is boiled down to sugar. This is capable of holding two tons of sugar at a time. When boiled it is placed in pans capable of holding two hundred pounds each, where it is left for a few hours and allowed to crystallize, when it is placed in the sugar centrifugals and refined, turning out the most beautiful of white sugar. Everything in the factory is done by the application of steam from four boilers sixteen feet long by five feet in diameter. In the process no fire is used except in the small furnace where the carbonic gas is made for the saturation pans.

The factory is thoroughly lighted by David Boyle's Pneumatic Gas Machine, patented June 7th, 1870, and is capable of supplying 220 burners in one building. The factory has seventy-seven burners attached, and when lighted work can be done as readily by night as by daylight.

This is the largest successful beet sugar factory in the United States, and is under the immediate control of M. D. Rimesteel, A. Otto and Ewald Klinsen, and the two former have no superiors as the United States as manufacturers of beet sugar. Otto was awarded a diploma and medal for exhibiting the best crystallized sugar at the Paris Exposition in 1867.

Esau.—We like Mark Twain's book giving an account of his adventures in the excursion of the Quaker City to the Mediterranean in 1867, on several accounts, but especially because he has in it a little episode in which he does justice to the memory and character of that ancient patriarch Esau, the brother of Jacob, who is noticed much more extensively in the sacred writings.

It has been the style with all the theologian writers we have ever met with, to abuse poor Esau in a way which we think is equally ungenerous and unjust. The mere fact that Jacob was preferred before him they seem to consider quite sufficient to warrant them in speaking of him with contempt, and as if he merited nothing but ill treatment, if not abuse, even in his father's house, although there is nothing on record to show that he was not as obedient and faithful a son as Jacob was, and his character was not in all respects as good. We sometimes think he was the best of the two, because it does not appear that he was ever guilty of any thing ungenerous or mean towards his brother, or that he ever sought to take advantage of his necessities, which is more than can be said of Jacob.

Jacob, besides taking advantage of Esau's necessities to get away his birthright, also by deception and lying cheated him out of the blessing intended for him, while obeying the commands of his father, and yet got blessed for doing it. It is true that Jacob had an excuse for his offence, that he was prompted to it by the commands of his mother, who was the more guilty party, and but for whose orders he never would have thought of undertaking the game. But all that did not detract from the character of Esau, or render him unworthy of a blessing, or an object of contempt, as he has so generally been held to be. It is true that he made some threats at first, when he saw himself so unjustly treated, but that was so natural he could hardly be blamed for it.

In after years, when [illegible] he was about to meet the brother [illegible] deeply wronged, his conscience no doubt smote him as he thought of his own ungenerous acts, and he treated as he saw the little right he had to look for any generosity in return. Esau was coming to meet him at the head of four hundred men. He was no small character, but had got to be a powerful man, if not a great one, so Jacob only thought of the sacrifices he might make to secure with his family the fate he deserved. He was ready to yield up all his property without an effort to resist. But how was it when the wronged but noble minded brother arrived to meet the one who had so much injured him? Not the first thought of revenge was in his noble heart. Instead of cherishing malice, he had forgotten all the past, and rushed to embrace the brother from whom he had been so long separated. When tendered the present of many goodly flocks and herds with which Jacob thought to conciliate him, he declined them all, and in his generous and loving spirit, said, "Nay, my brother, I have enough," thus showing that while free from all thoughts of revenge he was equally so from avarice. He would receive nothing, and no doubt with many wishes for Jacob's health and prosperity passed on his way. Noble hearted Esau, so much despised and so often tradiced, how well would it be if the world contained more like him, even among religious professors.

A Cedar Falls bridegroom ate too liberally at his wedding supper, and had his sleep disturbed by a nightmare. He dreamed that he was chaffed to a log and placed on a railway track. He tugged and pulled and twisted to free himself before the train approached, but was unsuccessful until the train dashed in when he was lifted by the cow-catcher and awoke to find himself lying on the floor, his wife standing over him brandishing a chair and demanding to know why he had pulled her out of bed by the leg.
