XXXVIII.

To reconcile Faith with Reason, and to be actuated and exalted by Faith, are the great needs of the Human Soul. It is by Faith, and not by Reason, that nations effect great conquests and achievements, and that society is saved from corruption and putrefaction. Want of Faith is the epidemic of the present century. Reason alone, the High-priest of Nature, presides at the Shrine of Truth. It is to Reason, that the Ancients gave the name of Wisdom, resident in the Very, Unmanifested Deity; holds the beam." And from these, thus in equilibrium, results the perfect and eternal Beauty or Harmony, which Reason teaches us must be the law of the Universe, and therefore the essence of the wholeness of the Divine Attributes; and this is symbolized in Masonry by the two columns, connected by the arch, at whose summit is the key-stone of the Mythical Temple of Solomon.

[COMMUNICATED.]

THE SUFFERING FREEDMEN.

It would appear that something must be done for the freedmen of the South, and that speedily, or they will die in great numbers of famine and pestilence. Last year thousands were in a state of destitution in February and March. This year a large number are starving in December and January. There is no agricultural employment in the South which will at present prices do more than give negro families a current support during the season of cultivation. When the crop is made and harvested, and labor no longer required, the negro, with his wife and children, has no means of support until spring. Even when the season of planting returns, there is a want of food in the country, and laborers cannot be fed. Cotton can no longer be successfully cultivated, and other crops requiring a smaller amount of labor must be substituted during the coming year, necessarily throwing a large number of negroes out of employment, and making their condition next year even worse than the present. Some may be supported for several months, by working on the levees at the expense of Government, as proposed by Gen. Gillem, but this will be confined to comparatively few, and even to them the relief will be only temporary. The amount required in addition to relieve the impending distress must be estimated in millions; and this must inevitably be repeated next year, and every year, more or less, for a long while.

It should now be considered whether the proper remedy is not emigration, and whether this will not be the most expensive, and best for the negroes. Besides Liberia, which is too remote, there are the West India Islands, and all the coasts of the Isthmus and of South America, within the tropics close at hand, affording abundant room, and a soil and climate nearly the same as that of Africa, whence the negro race originally came. In all these places the negroes of the South might live more comfortably than in their present localities, and much as fifty millions of the race are now living in Africa, while every means for their moral and religious improvement may be applied even more successfully. It is only under the rays of a tropical sun that the negro thrives, increases and lives happily without the assistance of white men. In this country, and in a state of slavery, the negro has increased and prospered only because the white man has kept him upon pork and corn bread to supply his system with hydro-carbon, for the generation of animal heat, and because he has so clothed him as to best preserve this heat of body. Take these away white he is kept in a climate so much colder than that providentially assigned him, and he ceases to propagate his species, languishes and dies. This is the present and prospective condition, and the inevitable consequence is a gradual reduction in number and final extinction. Every physiologist acknowledges this, and it cannot be long ignored by politicians and legislators.

The next most feasible remedy to emigration South, would be emigration North. Cheap labor at the North would be destructive of negro life, but in the cities and towns of the Northern States, negroes might be employed as house-servants, and in factories and workshops, well protected from the cold, and at the same time subsisted, as they have heretofore been by Southern planters, principally upon corn, wholesome food. Their clothing, too, would be of that kind so essential to their comfort and health, and such as negroes left to themselves are not likely to provide. This would be good economy for all who require employees for in-door labor; and for the white laborers displaced by these arrangements, there is plenty of room, and employment more congenial and profitable, in the great West. No greater blessing could befal the vast tide of immigration from foreign countries, than to be forced to engage in agricultural employments by the press of circumstances. They would be both healthier and happier, become better citizens and increase more rapidly in number. The soil of the West would by this means become more productive, and even in the South, almost the only hope of raising cotton for export in future depends upon its cultivation upon small farms by white labor. Steady and laborious white farmers are now the only people who can afford to raise cotton at present prices.

Congress is now imperatively called upon to make such provision for the "Wards of the Nation," as will save them from famine and pestilence, which are inseparable calamities. Twenty million dollars will be required for food and clothing during the Winter and Spring, and when Summer comes supplies cannot be withheld, for not more than one-tenth of the negro population can then be employed and supported by the white people for the cultivation of crops; and next year we shall hear of want and starvation in November and December. Besides, it must be considered that feeding and clothing negroes without requiring labor in return is ruinous to them. If we find them indolent now, what will they be after one or more years subsistence upon government bounty? The evil increases with time, and the only certain remedy is dispersion; sending a portion of them into tropical regions where we know they can live without the aid of white men, and a portion into parts of the country where their labor can be made available to white men, and where their employers will be interested in their support and protection.

AN IMPORTANT CHANCERY SUIT DECIDED.

Gen. S. B. Buckner Recovers His Property.

From the Louisville Courier, 31st ult.:

In 1861, while the Confederate army was at Bowling Green, the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company instituted a suit, accompanied by an affidavit by its President, Mr. Guthrie, that Gen. Buckner had destroyed the splendid bridge which spanned Green river, and alleged that he being in the rebel army his property was subject to attachment to cover the damages. Under the shameful laws enacted by the Legislature in 1861 the attachments were levied upon all his estate in Kentucky, consisting of an elegant residence, three stories high, with seventy-nine feet front of Sixth street and running through the entire square with equal front on Center street, a house and two lots in Elizabethtown; a farm of some hundreds of acres, being his ancestral home, in Hart county; and his library and furniture, and a large amount of other personal property. Without any process being served upon him a verdict was obtained, under the statutes then existing, of more than sixty thousand dollars. The residence and the farm were sold by the Marshal, and purchased by the railroad company, who paid for it by giving Gen. Buckner a credit on their judgment. The personal property was also sold, and the proceeds paid to the railroad. By his parole, Gen. Buckner, after the war, was not permitted to return to Kentucky, but about six months ago, by attorney, he filed a pleading in the name of a petition and answer, asking to be made a party to the suit, and alleging that he did not destroy the bridge, but had he done so, he would be justified by the laws of war. A retrial was ordered. Various preliminary questions were decided against him. The objections were met by additional preparation. After two arguments the case was submitted for final judgment, but before the chancellor had given his opinion the railroad company agreed to surrender to Gen. Buckner his property, which they held, and on yesterday Col. R. W. Woolley, for Gen. Buckner, took possession of the Louisville estate, and he is authorized to enter upon the Hart county property. It was also agreed that the question of rents and profits due to Gen. Buckner, and some moneys expended by the railroad company in removing liens and improvements, should be referred for adjustment to the commissioner of the court, to report the accounts between the parties, and Gen. Buckner agreed not to institute a subsequent suit for damages because of the attachment.

There are many friends of that distinguished gentleman who will rejoice to learn that he has recovered his estate, and every lover of good government will rejoice that not only have the spoliations under the shameful legislation of 1861 ceased in Kentucky, but that law and justice are now administered not only to those at home, but to exiles away. The Hon. James Speed was counsel for the railroad, and Col. E. S. Worthington, Judge Brown and R. W. Woolly for General Buckner.

Faith and Reason are subject to the universal law of Equilibrium. Contrary in their natures, they are not hostile to each other; and the man or people that acts on the theory that they are so, by ignoring either, treads the downward path to perdition. The French revolution ended in despotism, as it began in bloodshed and glided into anarchy, because it repudiated Faith, and adored Reason alone.
