AN AMERICAN FAILING.

Englishman Says We Don't Speak Well of Our Wealthy People.

Walter D. Callan, a resident of Stratford-on-Avon, was recently visiting relatives in Washington. In conversation with a Star reporter, he said: "I can't understand your American newspapers. An acquaintance here called my attention to a paragraph published in an Atlanta paper, called The Constitution. It went on to say that 6,000 Americans visited Shakespeake's birthplace every year, and added that most of them were of the suddenly rich class, who go to Europe because it is the fashion, while the fact was that they didn't know the difference between the Blarney stone and the Koh-i-noor, or the Tower of London and a hole in the ground, while few of them had ever read even so much as a page of Shakespeare's writing.

"I have lived at Stratford-on-Avon for several years, and I know I express the opinion of the entire community when I say that the American visitors to the shrine of the immortal genius are more intelligent and appreciative and more familiar, not only with the writings, but with the vague history of the bard of Avon, than any other class of the people who come to it, not even excepting our own people. I can't, for the life of me, see why American newspapers are continually running down their own country.

"It seems to be particularly delightful to the average American newspaper writer to throw inky mud at his successful fellow-citizens, who are fortunate enough to enjoy the leisure that wealth affords. The average Englishman, who reads all the stories in his own papers about the vulgarity of the American well-to-do classes, and then sees similar stories published in the papers in the United States, expects, when he comes to this country, to find the tawdry and the make-believe overtopping all else. He is agreeably surprised to find that neither the journals of his own people nor those on the side of the water correctly represent the better class of Americans. He quickly discovers that the refinement of the better American homes and the people who occupy them is not to be surpassed by the aristocracy of any older nation.

"And he will also find, which is better still, a true appreciation of the better things of life among those who can afford to enjoy them. But I was amazed at the far West. I spent three weeks in Denver, and I never met more cultivated people in my life. Their society is charming, their homes are superb. When I go back to England my notions of America will be vastly changed. But I can't understand the way your newspapers invariably sneer at everything American after it gets income enough to indulge in the satisfaction of a cultivated taste. They should be 'called down,' as the saying is here, and be taught that a person must not necessarily be an ignorant vulgarian because he happens to be worth $35,000 or $40,000 a year."

DIAMONDS IN THIS COUNTRY.

Those Found Are Mostly of Meteoric Origin.

Though diamonds will never be an important product of the United States, only an occasional gem of this kind being picked up here and there, such vast quantities of them are consumed here that the geographical survey has thought it worth while to prepare a monograph on the subject, which will soon be issued.

The fact has been established, says the Providence Journal, that the supposed diamonds found in meteorites near the Canyon Diablo, in Arizona, are actually such. This is a matter of profound interest, indicating as it does that such stones exist on other planets. Some authorities assert that diamonds, like coal, which is so nearly of the same chemical constitution, could not possibly come into existence without previous vegetable growths to generate their material.

For this reason they infer that the finding of the gems in the meteorites proves that there must have been vegetable life in the place whence the meteorites came. If there was vegetable life there, it is a fair presumption that there was animal life also. All this may be untrue, but it affords the first guess glimpse ever obtained into the greatest problem that mankind has attempted to handle—namely, the question whether life exists in other worlds than ours.

It seems strange to take a couple of ounces of charcoal in one's hand and to consider that one is handling the pure material of the diamond. If you could transform it into crystalline form, you could sell those few pinches of stuff for $1,000,000 perhaps. No wonder that chemists are eager to discover the secret of effecting this change. To assert that they will never learn how to make crystals of carbon would be tantamount to saying that the voltaic battery real diamonds of almost microscopic size have been deposited upon threads of platinum.

But even if a successful process should be discovered it might be that the cost of making a diamond by it would be bigger than the price of a stone of equal size and purity from the mines. One recalls the experiments of Prof. Sage, who turned out gold pieces in his laboratory from gold extracted from the ashes of certain burned vegetable substances. The result was beautiful, scientifically speaking, but the expense of making in this way one $5 piece was about $25.

The value of rough gems of all sorts produced in this country in 1893 was $50,000 less than the output for the year before, amounting to only $262,000. The decrease was mainly owing to the industrial depression. The precious stones of the United States are sold in large part to tourists, who purchase them as souvenirs of localities visited.

A FISHHAWK'S MISTAKE.

The Bird's Keen Eye Deceived in This Case.

Fishhawks get their entire food supply from the water. Their eyes are so constructed that even at great heights they can see fish that swim near the surface and then dive with lightning speed. The fish is caught in the claws and is taken to the nest of the bird before being eaten, says the Philadelphia Times. The writer has seen a hawk make a mistake and catch a hard crab, and when the crab got both his big claws fairly at work on the tender part of the bird's legs there was somewhat of shaking and diving in the air to get rid of the crab, but it is not often they get fooled. It is generally all in their favor. A hawk will fly away with a big eel wriggling in its claws that a man could not hold thirty second with both hands. The hawks sometimes, however, will dive at things they do not want, and a thing occurred a few years ago which is worth telling.

A steamer was passing Seabright. It was a big coaster from Savannah to New York, and a lady on board lost overboard a handsome and valuable lace shawl, which floated away after striking the water. The passengers, being interested, watched the shawl as far as they could see it, and finally, saw a fishhawk dive at it, get it fast to his claws and fly inland with it. The lady was very much put out at losing the article, and advertised a reward for the same. A lineman took a notion he could get the shawl after hearing the circumstances, and with his spurs he started to pay a visit to every fishhawk's nest in the country immediately back of Seabright. The shawl was found hanging on the side of a nest on the Lewis White farm near Little Silver. What the hawk wanted with the shawl is hard to tell, for they use no such thing in building their nests.
